INTRODUCTION

This translation of the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa being made for the Asiatic Society of Bengal naturally follows the edition of this work prepared by the Rev. Dr. K. M. Banerjee, and published in the Bibliotheca Indica in 1862; yet other editions and some MSS. have been consulted and are referred to. The translation has been kept as close to the original as possible, consistently with English sense and idiom; for a translation loses some of its interest and much of its trustworthiness, when the reader can never know whether it reproduces the original accurately or only the purport of the original. The time during which the work has been in hand has rendered it difficult to maintain one system of transliteration throughout; but, in order to place the whole in a consistent state, the system established by the Royal Asiatic Society and approved by the Asiatic Society of Bengal has been adopted in the Index and in this Introduction.

The general character of this Purāṇa has been well summed up by Prof. Wilson in his preface to his Translation of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, except that his description hardly applies to the Devī-māhātmya. "This Purāṇa has a character different from that of all the others. It has nothing of a sectarial spirit, little of a religious tone; rarely inserting prayers and invocations to any deity; and such as are inserted are brief and moderate. It deals little in precepts, ceremonial or moral. Its leading feature is narrative; and it presents an uninterrupted succession of legends, most of which when ancient are embellished with new circumstances, and when new partake so far of the spirit of the old, that they are disinterested creations of the imagination, having no particular motive, being designed to recommend no special doctrine or observance. Whether they are derived from any other source, or whether they are original inventions, it is not possible to ascertain. They are most probably, for the greater part at least, original; and the whole has been narrated in the compiler's own manner; a manner superior to that of the Purāṇas in general, with exception of the Bhāgavata."

Composition

The Purāṇa is clearly divisible (as Dr. Banerjee noticed) into five distinct parts, namely :-

1. Chapter 1-9, in which Jaimini is referred by Mārkaṇḍeya to the wise Birds, and they directly explain to him the four questions that perplexed him and some connected matters.
2. Chapter 10-41, where, though Jaimini propounds further questions to the Birds and they nominally expound them, yet the real speakers are Sumati, nicknamed Jaḍa, and his father.
3. Chapter 42-79: here, though Jaimini and the Birds are the nominal speakers, yet the real speakers are Mārkaṇḍeya and his disciple Krauṣṭuki.

4. Chapter 80-89, the Devī-māhātmya, a pure interpolation, in which the real speaker is a ṛṣi named Medhas, and which is only repeated by Mārkaṇḍeya.
5. Chapter 90-134, where Mārkaṇḍeya and Krauṣṭuki carry on their discourse from chapter 78.

The 134th chapter concludes the work; it is a necessary corollary to the first part.

There can be no doubt that only the third and fifth of these parts constituted the Purāṇa in its original shape as Mārkaṇḍeya's Purāṇa. The name would imply that originally Mārkaṇḍeya was the chief figure, and it is only in the third part that he appears as the real teacher. There is, however, clearer evidence that the Purāṇa began with the third part originally, for this is asserted almost positively in chapter 42, verses 16 to 25. There Mārkaṇḍeya, after declaring that this Purāṇa, equally with the Vedas, issued from Brahmā's mouth, says— "I will now tell it to you.....Hear all this from me.....as I formerly heard it when Dakṣa related it. "These words plainly mean that the true Purāṇa began here; or, if the necessary words of introduction be prefixed, that it began at verse 16 or 17, which verses have been slightly modified since in order to dovetail them into the preceding portion.

The first and second parts were composed afterwards and then prefixed to the Purāṇa proper. That they were later compositions is implied by the fact that the Birds recite the Purāṇa proper as an authority, and is indeed indicated by the origin attributed to them. While the original Purāṇa was proclaimed to be a revelation from Brahmā himself, no higher authority is claimed for the first and second parts than Mārkaṇḍeya and the unknown brāhmaṇa Sumati Jaḍa. Further, mention is made in chapter 23, verse 33, of Purāṇas which narrate Viṣṇu's manifestations. This expression is vague. If it means lengthy descriptions of some of the incarnations, such Purāṇas might be the Viṣṇu, Brahma-vaivarta, Brahma and Bhāgavata; but the last two were pronounced by Prof. Wilson to be late compositions, and the reference here may be to the former two only, to which he assigned about an equal date with this Purāṇa. There is nothing definite to show whether the first and second parts had been united before they were prefixed to the Purāṇa proper, or whether the second part was inserted after the first had been prefixed; yet it would seem more probable that they had been united before they were prefixed. There is a marked similarity between them.

The prefixing of the discourses delivered by the Birds to the Purāṇa proper raised the Birds to the primary and chief position and tended to derogate from Mārkaṇḍeya's pre-eminence; but clashing was avoided and Mārkaṇḍeya's supremacy was preserved by two expedients; first, he was introduced at the very beginning in order that he might expressly declare the wisdom and authority of the Birds; and secondly, the original Purāṇa was interfered with as little as possible by making the Birds repeat it in its entirety as Mārkaṇḍeya's teaching, conclusive upon the subjects dealt with in it. The Birds on beginning it retire from further notice, but reappear with Jaimini in the final chapter to conclude their discourse and give consistency to the combined instruction. This was a termination rendered necessary by the prefixing of the first two parts to the original Purāṇa.

The second part appears to have been amplified beyond its primary scope. It discourses about birth and death, about the hells, about sins and their punishments and about yoga or religious devotion. All these subjects are briefly dealt with, though the description of the different hells is ampler than in other Purāṇas, but the last subject leads to a discursive exposition. If dealt with like the other subjects, the exposition would pass from chapter 16, verse 12 immediately to chapter 34, where king Alarka is driven by adversity to seek Dattātreyā's advice and that ṛṣi expounds the doctrines of yoga to him in chapters 35 to 40, and the story naturally closes with chapter 41. But the reference to that king and that ṛṣi was considered to require some elucidation at chapter 16, verse 13, hence the story of Dattātreyā and the story of Alarka's parents Ṛtadhvaja and Madālasā are made the introduction to the direct exposition of yoga, with the result that the digression is so long that, when the subject of yoga is reached, its connection with Jaimini's questions has been lost to sight; and even the passage from the story of Dattātreyā to that of Alarka at the end of chapter 16 is inapt and abrupt.

Both these stories moreover appear in their turn to have been expanded beyond their natural course. The story of the Brāhmaṇa and his devoted wife in chapter 16, which furnishes an unnecessary explanation of the birth of Dattātreyā, is a story of common town life, an absurd anachronism compared with what it explains; and it seems with its reference to a temple dedicated to Anasūyā during her life-time to be an interpolation intended for her glorification. The story of Ṛtadhvaja and Madālasā is a charming one of simple marvel and runs its natural course in chapters 17 to 24 as far as Madālasā's instruction of her son Alarka in kingly duties; but the following chapters 25 to 32, in which she expounds the laws regarding brāhmaṇas, sṛāddhas, custom, etc., hardly accord with the story or with her position and knowledge, and seem to be an interpolation. Some teaching on such matters being deemed desirable, here was the only place where the addition was possible.

The Devī-māhātmya stands entirely by itself as a later interpolation. It is a poem complete in itself. Its subject and the character attributed to the goddess show that it is the product of a later age which developed and took pleasure in the sanguinary features, of popular religion. The praise of the goddess Mahā-māyā begins in the ordinary style. Her special glorification begins in chapter 76, and is elaborated with the most extravagant laudation and the most miraculous imagination. Some of the hymns breathe deep religious feeling, express enthusiastic adoration, and evince fervent spiritual meditation. On the other hand, the descriptions of the battles abound with wild and repulsive incidents, and revel in gross and amazing fancies. The Devī-māhātmya is a compound of the most opposite characters. The religious out-pourings are at times pure and elevated : the material descriptions are absurd and debased.

The ending of the Purāṇa deserves notice. It closes with the exploits of king Dama. According to the Gauḍīya or Bengal MSS, which Dr. Banerjee followed, the Purāṇa ends abruptly in chapter 134. leaving Dama acquiescing tamely in the flight of his father's murderer Vapuṣmat. The up-country version (the ending of which he placed in an appendix) is found in the Bombay and Poona editions and carries the story on till Dama takes vengeance on Vapuṣmat. Dr. Banerjee considered the abruptness and incompleteness were strong evidence of the genuineness of the Bengal ending; and no doubt that is a fair argument, but it overlooks the character of the two endings. The pusillanimity which that ending ascribes to Dama jars with the whole tone of his threat in chapter 130 which both versions account genuine. On the other hand the up-country ending narrates the fulfillment of that threat, and the savage and even inhuman incidents which it mentions are hardly explicable if it is spurious, for Dama after killing Vapuṣmat used Vapuṣmat's blood and flesh for the oblations due to his murdered father, and also (it is implied) gave certain degraded brāhmaṇas a cannibal feast. A forger would not wish nor dare to invent in his eulogy of one of the kings such repulsive incidents, desecrating the most sacred rites and tenets of his religion, nor if we can imagine such a forgery did occur, could it have ever obtained even tolerance. It is impossible, therefore, to think that the up-country ending is a forgery; and if it be the true original, one can easily understand why such an ending should have been struck out, and how the reviser, unable to invent or palm off a new ending, had to bring the story to the abrupt and jejune conclusion of the Bengal version. The up-country ending has, therefore, been adopted to the true version in this translation, and the Bengal ending has been noticed separately. The former discloses, like stray passages elsewhere, that savagery was not absent from the earliest memories of the Aryans in India.

For the purpose of discussing the Purāṇa further, it will be convenient to consider the first and second parts as composing one Section, and the third and fifth parts as composing another Section; and this division will be observed in what follows. The Devī-māhātmya constitutes a Section by itself.

Place of Origin

With regard to the question of the place of its origin, the Purāṇa in both its Sections professes to have emanated from Western India.

The second Section as the oldest may be considered first. In chapter 42, vs. 24 and 25, Mārkaṇḍeya says positively that Cyavana was the ṛṣi who first declared it: Cyavana obtained it from Bhṛgu and declared it to the ṛṣis, they repeated it to Dakṣa and Mārkaṇḍeya learnt it from Dakṣa. Now Cyavana is intimately associated with the west of India, especially with the region about the mouths of the rivers Narmadā and Tapti. His father Bhṛgu and their descendants Ṛcika, Jamadagni and Paraśu-Rāma are connected in many a legend with all the country north, east and south of that region That was the territory of the Bhārgava race (see pp. 310 and 368). As Cyavana settled near the mouths of those rivers, the Purāṇa itself claims to have been first declared by him in that region.

Mārkaṇḍeya himself was a Bhārgava. This is stated in chapter 39, v. 18 and chapter 46 vs. 14-17; and also in the Mahābhārata, Vana-p. ccxvi. 14104-5. The Bhārgavas spread from Cyavana's region, especially eastward along the valleys of the Narmadā and Tapti, as those valleys were gradually wrested from the bill races by the Yādavas and Haihayas, the most famous conquerors of which race were Arjuna Kārtavīrya and Jyāmagha. The former reigned in Māhiṣmatī on the Narmadā; and the latter apparently conquered further eastward (see M. Bh., Vana-p. cxvi., Śānti-p. xlix; Hari-V., xxxiii. 1850-90, and xxxvii. 1980-87; Viṣṇu P., cli-clxxiv; and Matsya P. xliii.-13-51 and xlv. 28-36). Mārkaṇḍeya is said to have paid visits to the Pāṇḍavas and to have had a tīrtha at the junction of the Ganges and Gomatī (M. Bh., Vana-p. lxxxiv. 8058-9), but his special abode appears to have been on the river Payoṣṇī (the modern Purnā and its continuation in the Tapti, see p. 259) (id. lxxxviii. 8330). Both by lineage and by residence therefore he belonged to that western country, and the original Purāṇa must have been composed there. Bhārgavas are continually alluded to throughout the Purāṇa.

As regards the first Section, it is said the Birds, to whom Jaimini was referred, were living in the Vindhya mountains, and it was there that they delivered the Purāṇa to him. They are explained of course to be four brāhmaṇa brothers in a state of transmigration, and it appears to be implied in chapter 3, vs. 22-24, that their father, the muni Sukṛṣa, dwelt on or near the Vindhya. He had a brother named Tumburu. There were other persons of this name, such as Tumburu who was a guru among the Gandharvas (see pp. 571, 647, 648, and 118 as corrected; and M. Bh., Sabhā-p. li. 1881.); but it seems permissible to connect this brother Tumburu with the tribes of the names Tumbura and Tumbula who dwelt on the slopes of the Vindhya (p. 343).

The Birds are said to have dwelt in the Vindhya in a cave, where the water was very sacred (p. 17), and which was sprinkled with drops of water from the river Narmadā (p. 19); and it is no doubt allowable to infer the situation from these indications, namely, some cliffs of the Vindhya hills where those hills abut on the river Narmadā at a very sacred tīrtha. Such a spot cannot be sought above the modern Hoshangabad, for the river above that was encompassed in early times by hills, dense forest and wild tribes. Among the very sacred places where the Vindhya hills on the north approach close to the river, none satisfies the conditions better than the rocky island and town of Mandhāta, which is to be identified with Māhiṣmatī, the ancient and famous Haihaya capital. The modern town of Mahesar, some fifty miles lower down the river, claims to be the ancient Māhiṣmatī, but does not satisfy the allusions. Māhiṣmatī was situated on an island in the river and the palace looked out on the rushing stream (Raghu-V., vi. 43). This description agrees only with Mandhāta. Māhiṣmatī was sacred to Agni in the earliest times (M. Bh., Sabhā-p. 1125-03). Mandhāta has special claims to sanctity; it has very ancient remains; it has become sacred to Śiva, and the famous shrine of Omkāra and other temples dedicated to him are here (Hunter, Impl. Gaz., "Mandhāta"). The hills close in on the river here, and on the north bank are Jain temples. In these hills on the north bank overlooking the river at Mandhāta we may place the alleged cave where the first part of the Purāṇa professes that it was delivered; and this identification will be found to explain many further features of the Purāṇa

With regard to the second part it may be noticed that Sumati Jaḍa, whose words the Birds repeat, belonged also to the family of Bhṛgu (p. 63). Hence this part belonged to the same region where the Bhārgavas predominated. With this view agrees the statement that the rainy season lasts four months and the dry season eight months (p. 147), as I understand is the rule in this region. It is further worthy of note that eyes of blue colour, like the blue water-lily (nīlotpala) are given to Lakṣmī (p. 104) and to Madālasā (p. 114); and such a comparison is rare, I believe, in Sanskrit. It was (may it be inferred?) in Western India that people with blue eyes could have been seen as visitors in circumstances of such appreciation that their features became a model of beauty.

There are some other matters that might have been expected to yield information of a local character, such as the lists of various trees, plants, birds and animals (pp. 24-31, 164-6 and 244-5) and the peculiar exposition of the construction and nomenclature of fortresses (pp. 240-2). I have, however, been unable to deduce any definite conclusion from the latter, and the lists betray no special local character, but rather aim at being as comprehensive in their way as the geographical chapters (54 and 55).

Both the first and second Sections, therefore, plainly emanated from Western India, and indicate the middle portion of the Narmadā and Tapti valleys as their place of origin. It remains to consider the Devī-māhātmya, and the following considerations point to the same place of origin, especially to Mandhāta.

The Devī-māhātmya must have originated in some place dedicated to the goddess in her terrible form. The poem has now become a text-book of the worshippers of Kālī throughout Northern India and in Bengal, especially at the great Durgā-pūjā festival, but it did not originate in Bengal. The goddess whom the poem glorifies is a goddess formed by the union of the vigorous or energies (tejas, not śakti) of all the gods (p. 473), and she is called Mahāmāyā, Caṇḍikā, Ambikā, Bhadrakālī and Mahā-kālī (pp. 469, 476, etc. and 521). Though identified with Śrī once (p. 484), yet she is generally identified in the hymns with Suva's consort as Durgā, Gaurī, Śiva-dūtī and Mahā-kālī (pp. 484-5, 494-6, and 521). The goddess Kālī, however, who is also called Cāmuṇḍā (p. 500), is made a separate goddess who issued from Caṇḍikā's forehead (p. 499); and Caṇḍikā gave her the name Cāmuṇḍā, because (as it is expressed in a bon mot) she had killed two great demons Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa (p. 500). Whether this derivation has any imaginary truth or not must be very doubtful, because fanciful derivations are common in this Purāṇa and elsewhere. The Śaktis of the gods are made separate emanations from the gods, and are called the Mothers, mātr-gaṇa (pp. 502, 504). The poem is therefore a glorification of Durgā in her terrible aspect, with Kālī as an emanation from her.

One would therefore look among the strongholds of Śiva worship for the birth-place of this poem. Now it is remarkable that of the great liṅga shrines (which are reckoned to be twelve), no less than six are situated in or near the very region of Western India where the Purāṇa originated; viz, Omkāra at Mandhāta, Mahākāla at Ujjain, Tryambaka at Nasik, Ghr̥ṇeśvara at Ellora, Nāganāth east of Ahmadnagar, and Bhīma-śāṅkara at the sources of the river Bhīma. Mandhāta was doubly distinguished, for another famous līṅga was Amareśvara on the south bank of the river there. At none of them however, except at Omkāra, was Śiva or drug worshipped with sanguinary rites, as far as I can find.

In the Mahābhārata Durgā has the names Mahākālī, Bhadrakālī, Caṇḍa and Candi; and she is also called Kālī, no distinction being made (Virāṭa-p. vi. 195; Bhīṣma-p. xxiii. 796-7). The name Cāmuṇḍā does not apparently occur there. Cāmuṇḍā was worshipped with human sacrifices, for she is mentioned in the fifth Act of the Mālatī-mādhava, where her temple is introduced and her votaries tried to offer a human sacrifice at the city Padmāvati. Padmāvati was a name of Ujjain; but some scholars would identify it with Narwar which is on the R. Sindh, though that town seems to be too distant to suit the description at the beginning of the ninth Act. Whether Padmāvati was Ujjain or not, there can be no doubt from that description that it was situated in the region north of the Vindhya between the upper portions of the rivers Chambal and Parbati, that is, in the region immediately north of Mandhāta.

The only local allusion in the poem is that the goddess is Mahākālī at Mahākāla (p. 521), which is a shrine of Śiva at Ujjain; and it is possible the poem may have been composed to proclaim the māhātmya or glory of that place. But this is hardly probable, because the allusion is very brief, and the worship there was not apparently of the kind to originate this poem. Moreover, if Padmāvati was Ujjain, the Mālatī-mādhava distinguishes between the temple of Cāmuṇḍā and the shrine of Mahākāla, for the temple is described as being adjacent to a field which was used as a burning-ground for corpses and which must have lain outside the city; and if Padmāvati was some other town, the allusion here to Mahākāla has no connection with Cāmuṇḍā or Caṇḍikā at Padmāvati. It is hardly probable that, if this poem originated at Ujjain, the goddess at the shrine of Mahākāla would have been referred to in this manner. Hence this passage more probably conveys only a commendatory allusion; and it seems more natural and appropriate to connect the poem with Mandhāta, where this phase of sanguinary worship was particularly strong.

The worship of Cāmuṇḍā points to the same conclusion. Human sacrifices had long been abolished in the civilized countries of India, and the offering of such sacrifices at Padmāvati could hardly have been a survival but must have been introduced from elsewhere. Such a practice would naturally be clandestine. Human sacrifices were offered in those times only among the rude tribes of Central India, among whom such sacrifices survived till the last century; hence it may be inferred that such offerings to Cāmuṇḍā at Padmāvati must have been introduced from places which bordered on those tribes and were affected by their rites. The middle portion of the Narmadā valley was eminently such a place. Pointing in the same direction is the statement in the Mahābhārata that Durgā had her eternal abode on the Vindhya and was fond of intoxicating liquor, flesh and cattle (Virāṭa-p. vi. 195). It seems reasonable then to conclude that the Devī-māhātmya is earlier than the Mālatī-mādhava; and if so, the name Cāmuṇḍā and the form Caṇḍikā occur apparently the first time in this poem.

Mandhāta was a famous ancient tīrtha and appears to have fallen into neglect and been almost deserted in the 11th and 12th centuries A.D., but its glory was revived. About the year 1165 "a Gosāin, named Daryāo Nāth, was the only worshipper of Omkāra on the island, which, pilgrims could not visit for fear of a terrible god called Kāla-bhairava and his consort Kālī Devī, who fed on human flesh. At last Daryāo Nāth by his austerities shut up Kālī Devī in a cave, the mouth of which may yet be seen, appeasing her by erecting an image outside to receive worship; while he arranged that Kāla Bhairava should, in future, receive human sacrifices at regular intervals. From that time devotees have dashed themselves over the Birkhala cliffs at the eastern end of the island on to the rocks by the river brink, where the terrible god resided; till in 1824 the British officer in charge of Nimar witnessed the last such offering to Kāla Bhairava." (Hunter, Impl. Gaz. , "Mandhāta"). There does not appear to be any information, what kind of worship was offered there before the 11th century, yet the facts suggest strongly that such sanguinary rites were not a new ordinance but had prevailed there before.

Both Śiva and his consort in their most terrible forms were thus worshipped at Mandhāta, which was almost exclusively devoted to their service; and it is easy to understand how such a sanguinary form of religion could take shape here. This region of the Narmadā valley was specially connected with demon legends, such as the demon stronghold of Tripura and the demon Mahiṣa, after which the towns Tewar and Mahesar are said to be named. It also bordered on the Nāga country. Mandhāta, with such associations, would be the most probable birth-place of this poem, and the brief allusion to Mahākāla would then be only a collateral one; yet, even if the poem was composed at Ujjain, the conclusion would still remain good that the poem originated in this region of Western India.

Date of the Purāṇa

The question of the date of the Purāṇa is more difficult, since all questions of chronology in Sanskrit writings are most uncertain. One definite and important date may be first noticed. Mahāmahopādhyāya Haraprasād Śāstrī found a copy of the Devī-māhātmya in old Newari characters in the Royal Library in Nepal, and it is dated 998 A.D. (See his Catalogue). It may be safely inferred therefrom, that this poem must have been composed before the beginning of the 10th century at the latest. The Devī-māhātmya cannot therefore be later than the 9th century and may be considerably earlier. Since it is the latest part of the Purāṇa, the other parts must have been composed earlier, and the question for consideration is, how much earlier?

Prof. Wilson in his preface to his Translation of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa pointed out that this Purāṇa is later than the Mahābhārata but anterior to the Brahma. Padma, Nāradya and Bhāgavata Purāṇas, and conjectured that it may be placed in the ninth or tenth century A.D. This, as already noticed, is too recent, moreover it has been discovered since that his estimates of the composition of the several Purāṇas under-reckon their age, and that the periods assigned by him should be moved some centuries earlier. For instance, he conjectured the collective writings known as the Skanda Purāṇa to be modern and "the greater part of the contents of the Kāśī Khaṇḍa anterior to the first attack upon Banaras by Mahmud of Gazani" (Preface, p. Ixxii) which must mean that the Kāśī Khaṇḍa is earlier than the 11th century A.D. But Mahāmahopādhyāya Haraprasād Śāstrī found in the Royal Library in Nepal a copy of the "Skanda Purāṇa" written in the later Gupta characters of the 6th or 7th century A.D. From that it is obvious that the composition of the Skanda Purāṇa must have taken place four or five centuries earlier than Prof. Wilson's estimate. Hence it is possible that a corresponding modification of his estimate regarding the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa should be made, and that would place it about the 4th century A.D.

Further evidence is obtained from Jain writings that the Purāṇas are much earlier than Prof. Wilson estimated. Thus the Padma Purāṇa of the Jains, which was written by Raviṣena in imitation of the Hindu Padma Purāṇa, contains, I understand, a couplet showing that it was composed in the year 678 A.D; and that Purāṇa mentions all the Purāṇas. All are mentioned again in the Jain Ādi Purāṇa of Jinasena who lived about a century later. This evidence would demonstrate that all the Hindu Purāṇas had been composed before the end of the sixth and probably by the end of the fifth century A.D; though of course it leaves room open for subsequent additions and interpolations in them.

A common method of estimating the age of a Sanskrit composition is to consider the religions and philosophical ideas embodied in it; yet to discuss questions of chronology on the basis of such ideas seems to be more interesting than convincing. Such ideas have passed along a course of development in India, but it is doubtful how far general inferences therefrom can be safely applied to fix the date of a particular work. Where such ideas are founded on sacred compositions, which are the subject of reverent study, there must be flows, eddies and intervals of stagnation, and even rapids and back currents, in the stream of such ideas. Their course may be compared with similar speculations, not in a single European country, but in the whole of Europe, for India has always comprised many countries; and the history of Europe during the last four hundred years shows, whether it would be easy to determine the date of a writing on such subjects in Latin solely from its contents, for the progress of thought in the different countries has been neither simultaneous nor uniform. Similarly in India, there can be no doubt that, while religion and philosophy have had their general course of development, the course has been very unequal in the different countries, so that it would not be unreasonable to suspect that at the same time one country was advancing, another was stationary, and a third was even degenerating under political adversity. The development of religion and philosophy in India then is not so clear that one can do more than venture to conjecture upon such grounds, at what period or periods this Purāṇa, which was written in Western India, was composed. And, as already mentioned, it has so little of a sectarian spirit or of special doctrines that the basis for conjecture is meagre. Subject to this caution the following features may be noticed.

Among the deities, Indra and Brahmā are mentioned often; next stand Viṣṇu and Śiva; then the Sun and Agni; and lastly Dharma and others. Indra is mentioned most often in the first and fifth parts, and Brahmā in the third and fifth parts; while Viṣṇu and Śiva do not show any particular preponderance. If the Devī-māhātmya is put aside, the Sun is the deity that receives the most special adoration, and his story is related twice, first, briefly in chapters 74 and 75, and afterwards with fullness in chapters 99-107. To this may be added the cognate worship of Agni in chapters 96 and 97. Such marked reverence for Agni and the Sun would be natural in such a place as Māhiṣmatī, which (as already mentioned) was specially sacred to Agni before the worship of Śiva obtained supremacy there. Kāmarūpa, the modern Gauhāṭī in Assam, is mentioned as specially appropriate for the worship of the Sun (p. 581), and why it should have been so characterised seems unintelligible unless it was considered to be an udaya-giri.

The prominent notice of the great Vedic god Indra, and of Brahmā the earliest of the post-Vedic gods, would indicate a fairly high antiquity for the Purāṇa, especially for the second Section, which boldly claims to have issued from Brahmā's mouth equally with the Vedas (p. 219) and thus to stand almost on an equality with them; an honour which none of the other Purāṇas ventures to arrogate for itself. Such an antiquity would also explain the high position assigned to the Sun and Agni, who are also among the chief Vedic gods; yet the special praise offered to the Sun may, as Dr. Banerjea hinted, be perhaps attributable in part to Persian influences.

The first Section of the Purāṇa is certainly later than the Mahābhārata, for the four questions that Jaimini propounds to the Birds arose expressly out of that work. These questions are, first, a religious enigma, Why did Vāsudeva (Viṣṇu) though devoid of qualities assume human shape with its qualities of goodness, passion and ignorance? secondly, a social perplexity, Why was Draupadī the common wife of the five Pāṇḍava brothers? thirdly, a moral incongruity, Why did Baladeva expiate the sin of brahmanicide by pilgrimage? and fourthly, a violation of natural justice, Why did Draupadī's five sons all perish in their youth? The obtrusion of these questions implies that the Mahābhārata was firmly established as an unimpeachable authority, so that difficulties involved in it could not be disputed and must admit of reconciliation with the laws of Righteousness.

The explanations offered by the Birds appear to be these. Vāsudeva (Viṣṇu) existed in quadruple form; the first form was devoid of qualities, but each of the others was characterised by one of the three qualities, so that in his assuming human and other shapes with all the qualities no violation occurred to his nature. The second question is solved by the assertion, that because of Indra's transgressions five portions of his essence became incarnate in the Pāṇḍavas, and his wife became incarnate as Draupadī, so that she was still the wife of only one person. The third question seems to turn on the ideas, that brahmanicide was a heinous sin expiable by death and that pilgrimage was a pious undertaking; how therefore could such a sin be expiated by such action? The answer seems to be that the sin was unintentional, being due to overpowering sensual influences, and did not call for the full rigour of punishment, while the real penance consisted in confession. The fourth question is solved by a story of transmigration; Draupadī's sons were five Viśva Devas who were cursed by Viśvāmitra to assume human form for a brief period.

The first two questions and answers call for some notice and throw some light on the age of the first Section of the Purāṇa.

With regard to the first question, Dr. Banerjee has remarked in his Introduction that the description of Vāsudeva belongs to the school Nārada-pañcarātra, to which Śaṅkarācārya has given an elaborate reply in his commentary on the Brahma Sūtras; while no trace of this doctrine is to be found in the second Section of the Purāṇa. As Śaṅkara lived in the 8th century A.D., that school existed before him. The first part of this Purāṇa was, therefore, probably prior to his time; yet it may possibly have been later. This comparison then yields nothing definite.

The second answer presents some remarkable peculiarities when compared with the Mahābhārata. That work gives two explanations about Draupadī's wifehood, first, why she was destined to have five husbands, and secondly, why the five Pāṇḍavas became her husbands.

The first explanation is given twice in the Ādi-parvan, viz., in clxix. 6420-34 and in cxvii. 7319-28. She had been a ṛṣi's daughter and unmarried; in order to obtain a husband she propitiated Śiva with austerities, and he offered her a boon. She begged for a husband, and in her eagerness made the request five times, hence he promised her five husbands, and in spite of her objection adhered to his word and promised them to her in another life. Hence she was born as Drupada's daughter. In the latter of these two passages and in line 7310 she is made an incarnation of Lakṣmī.

The second explanation is given in Ādi-parvan cxvii. 7275-7310. Indra went to Śiva on Mount Himavat and accosted him rudely, but Śiva awed him and pointed to a cave in the mountain wherein were four prior Indras. Śiva said that Indra and those four prior Indras should be born, in human shape in order to reduce the over-population of the world, and that Lakṣmī should be born and be their common wife. Accordingly Indra was born as Arjuna and the prior Indras as the other Pāṇḍavas, and Lakṣmī was born as Draupadī.

Now these stories in the Mahābhārata itself furnished some explanation, and why Jaimini should have felt any perplexity, if he had these explanations before him, is at first sight strange. This suggests a doubt whether they were then in the Mahābhārata, or whether they were inserted there afterwards to meet this very question. On the other hand, it may be noted that these explanations did not really solve the difficulty, for the five Indras who became the Pāṇḍavas were not the same deity, and thus Draupadī's husbands were still separate persons. On this point, therefore, the difficulty remained, and the answer given by the Birds removes it (though at variance with the Mahābhārata) by declaring that the Pāṇḍavas were all incarnations of portions of the same deity, Indra, and were thus really only one person. The Mahābhārata, however, presented a further difficulty, for why should Lakṣmī have become incarnate to be the wife of incarnations of Indra? The Birds alter this by declaring (again at variance with the Mahābhārata) that it was Indra's own wife who became incarnate as Draupadī. Both these contradictions are left unnoticed; yet it is said very truly that there was very great perplexity about this matter (p. 19).

This incongruity of Lakṣmī's becoming incarnate to be wife to incarnations of other deities suggests a further speculation. In the Mahābhārata as it now stands, Kṛṣṇa is an incarnation of Viṣṇu, and it was proper that Lakṣmī should become incarnate to be his queen. Nevertheless that work states that she became the wife of five persons all distinct from Viṣṇu. May it be surmised that these explanations in the Mahābhārata were fashioned before Kṛṣṇa had been deified, and before it was perceived that they could have any bearing on his story? If so, it is quite intelligible that it was deemed necessary, after Kṛṣṇa was deified, to remove the incongruity by asserting that Draupadī was an incarnation, not of Lakṣmī, but of Indrāṇī. This view, that the revised explanations here given regarding Draupadī and the Pāṇḍavas were necessitated by the deification of Kṛṣṇa, seems not improbable. If so, the revision and the name Vāsudeva, by which Viṣṇu is specially addressed in the first part, would indicate that the first part was composed, when the Kṛṣṇa legend had become so well established that it was needful to bring other stories into harmony with it.

The Purāṇa contains little reference to the political condition of India; yet it may be pointed out that all the stories narrated in the first Section relate to Madhya-deśa, the Himālayas and Western India, while no mention occurs of Southern, Eastern or north-western India. In the second Section, few illustrative stories occur apart from the main discourse on the Manus and the royal genealogies. Only one dynasty is treated of, that in which the chief princes were Vatsapri, Khanitra, Karandhama, Avikṣit and Marutta. These were famous kings, especially Marutta who was a universal monarch. I have not been able to find anything which indicates where their kingdom was, yet it must have been somewhere in the Middle-land or north-west, because of Marutta's relations with Bṛhaspati and Samvartta (M. Bh., Aśvam -p. iii-vi); the Middle-land here comprising the country as far east as Mithilā and Magadha. In the second Section the only allusions to other parts of India are one to the river Vitastā in the Punjab (p. 438), one to an unknown town in South India (p. 412), and several to Kāma-rūpa, the modern Gauhāṭi in Assam; but the author's knowledge of Eastern India was so hazy that he treats Kāmarūpa as being easy of access from the Middle-land (p. 581). Is it reasonable to draw any inference from the mental horizon here disclosed? It agrees with the state of India in the third century A.D.

The geographical chapters 54 and 55 are no doubt special compilations and may to a certain degree stand apart. They appear to aim at being comprehensive, and to enumerate all the countries, races and tribes till then known, whether ancient or mediaeval. This comprehensive character rather prevents the drawing of any large definite conclusions from them, yet two points may be noticed.

The Huṅas are placed among the peoples in the north in chapter 55, though the context is not very precise. The Huns in their migrations from the confines of China appear to have arrived to the north of India about the beginning of the third century A.D., and one branch the White Huns, established a kingdom afterwards in the Oxus valley. India had no actual experience of them until their first invasion, which was made through the north-western passes in the middle of the fifth century (Mr. V. Smith's Early History of India, pp. 272, 273). The allusion to the Huns therefore, with the position assigned to them in the north, in chapter 55, is plainly earlier than their invasion, and is what a writer in the third century or the early part of the fourth century would have made.

In these two chapters Prāgjyotiṣa is placed in the east, and no mention is made of Kāmarūpa. Prāgjyotiṣa was the ancient kingdom that comprised nearly all the north and east of Bengal (p. 328); later on it dwindled and seems to have lingered and perished in the east of Bengal; and after that Kāmarūpa came into prominence in its stead. In the Mahābhārata and Rāmāyaṇa Prāgjyotiṣa alone is named; Kāmarūpa is never, I believe, mentioned there, and it occurs in later writings only. In the Second Section however Kāmarūpa is mentioned, and no allusion is made to Prāgjyotiṣa. This difference tells in favour of the antiquity of these chapters.

With regard to the Devī-māhātmya, if the comparison made above between it and the Mālatī-mādhava is reasonable, it would follow that, since Bhavabhūti who wrote that play lived about the end of the seventh century A.D., this poem must be anterior. It would represent the incorporation of barbarous practices borrowed from the rude tribes of Central India into brahmanic doctrines, and might be assigned to the sixth or perhaps the fifth century.

From all these considerations it seems fair to draw the following conclusions. The Devī-māhātmya, the latest part, was certainly complete in the 9th century and very probably in the 5th or 6th century A.D. The third and fifth parts, which constituted the original Purāṇa, were very probably in existence in the third century, and perhaps even earlier; and the first and second parts were composed between those two periods.

Other matters of interest

Certain other matters may be mentioned, which are of great interest in the Purāṇa.

In the first part Jaimini, though a disciple of Vyāsa and a famous ṛṣi (Mahā-bhā., Śānti-p. cccli. 13647), is yet made, when perplexed by four difficult questions in Vyāsa's own work, the Mahābhārata, to seek instruction, not from Vyāsa but from Mārkaṇḍeya; and this raises a presumption that there was an intention to make Mārkaṇḍeya equal with, if not superior to, Vyāsa. Further, Mārkaṇḍeya does not himself explain the questions but, declining with a transparent excuse, refers Jaimini to the Birds. The Birds, though said no doubt to be brāhmaṇs undergoing a transmigration, were inferior in education and fame to Jaimini, yet they were deemed fully capable of authoritatively answering the questions that puzzled him. It seems hard to avoid suspecting again in this construction of the story, that there was an intention to exalt the instruction given by the munis of the Vindhya to equality with, if not superiority over, that given in Madhyadeśa. It may be mentioned that according to certain legends Vaiśampāyana's pupils were transformed into partridges (tittiri) in order to pick up the Black Yajus verses disgorged by one of their companions; but it does not seem reasonable to ascribe the introduction of these Birds as dramatis personae in this Purāṇa to any imitation of those legends, because the nature of the stories is wholly different. The use of the Birds seems rather to be the application of a class of ideas common in the animal-tales of folk-lore to religious teaching, and to be similar to the machinery employed by Bāṇa in his story of Kādambarī.

In the second part it is worthy of note that indulgence in spirituous liquor and in sensual enjoyments is viewed with little or no disapprobation in the story of Dattātreya; and meat and strong drink are mentioned as most acceptable offerings in the worship of Dattātreya (p. 106), as an incarnation of Viṣṇu (p. 99). Meat of various kinds, including even hog's flesh, is declared to be most gratifying to the piṭṛs. Such food was not unknown in ancient times, for it is said that during a severe famine king Triśaṅku supported Viśvāmitra's wife with the flesh of deer, wild pigs and buffaloes (Hari-V., 724-731).

A most extraordinary passage may be noticed in conclusion. It is related of king Dama that, after taking vengeance on prince Vapuṣmat, "with Vapuṣmat's flesh he offered the cakes to his [murdered] father, he feasted the brāhmaṇs who were sprung from families of Rākṣasas "(p. 683 with 679). Brāhmaṇs at times lost their caste and became degraded, but here the position is reversed and certain descendants of Rākṣasas were reckoned as brāhmaṇs. Such cannibalism is, I believe, unparalleled in Sanskrit, and it is almost incredible that there should have been brāhmaṇs of any kind whatever who would have participated in it. Eating human flesh was not unknown in ancient times (p. 427), yet a story is told in the Mahābhārata where Rākṣasa and even flesh eating Dasyus disdained the flesh of a true though degraded brāhmaṇ (Śānti-p. clxxii. 6420-29). This story of king Dama would seem to imply that it is of real antiquity, and that the account of the dynasty in which he occurred, and which is the only dynasty described, must be a purāṇa in the full meaning of the term.

ch. 1-3	1-10

Jaimini applied to Mārkaṇḍeya for instruction on four questions. Mārkaṇḍeya referred him to four learned Birds, sons of Droṇa and the Apsarās Vapu who was cursed by the ṛṣi Durvāsās to be a bird; and narrated the story of their birth, and of their education by Śamika; and explained that they were four brāhmanas, who were so born, because cursed by their father Sukṛṣa for not offering their bodies as food to a famished bird.

The Birds' discourse on Jaimini's four questions

---------	-------

Jaimini visited the Birds at the Vindhya Mts. and they answered his four questions thus :—Viṣṇu assumed bodily forms in order to accomplish good; Draupadī became the joint wife of the five Pāṇḍavas because they were all emanations of Indra; Baladeva committed brahmanicide during intoxication and expiated it by pilgrimage; and five Viśva Devas, who, on seeing Viśvāmitra's brutality to king Hariścandra, censured Viśvāmitra, incurred his curse thereby and were born as the five sons of Draupadī to die young and unmarried.

This story led the Birds at Jaimini's request to narrate the whole story of king Hariścandra's sufferings and ultimate beatitude; and the terrible fight which resulted therefrom between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra as gigantic birds.

The Birds' discourse on Jaimini's further questions Discourse on life, death and action

-----------	-------

Jaimini propounded further questions regarding conception, foetal life, birth, growth, death and the consequences of action; and the Birds answered them by reproducing the instruction that a brāhman Sumati, nick-named Jaḍa, once gave to his father (chapters 10-39).

Thus the Birds gave in Jaḍa's words a description of death, after-existence's and certain hells; of human conception and birth, and the evils of all existence; of certain other hells and the various terrible torments inflicted there; and they narrated the story of king Vipāścī's descent into hell, with a discourse regarding actions and the specific punishments for a long list of various sins, and of his deliverance from hell together with other persons confined there.

The Birds, continuing Jaḍa's discourse, broached the subject of yoga or religious devotion, but prefaced it with a long narrative (chapters 16 to 39). A brāhman Māṇḍavya was saved from a curse by his devoted wife, who stopped the rising of the sun and gained a boon from Atri's wife Anasūyā, the gods in consequence blessed Anasūyā, and Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva were born as her three sons Soma, Dattātreya and Durvāsās, Dattātreya indulged in sensual pleasures, Arjuna Kārtavīrya, however, being advised by his minister Gaiga to propitiate Dattātreya, because Dattātreya (being an incarnation of Viṣṇu) had once 'saved the gods from the demons, did so and by Dattātreya's blessing reigned gloriously 106 This led on to the story of Alarka, which is used to convey political, religious and social instruction (chapters 17 to 41)

97-124

King Satrujit's son Rtadhvaja lived in intimate friendship with two Nāga princes, they told their father Aśvatara—how Rtadhvaja had succoured the brāhman Gālava with the help of a wondrous horse named Kuvalaya, and descending to Pātāla, had killed the demon Pātāla-keṭu there, and had rescued and married the Gandharva princess Madālasā, and was famed as Kuvalayāśva, and also how a demon had caused Madālasā to die on a false report of Kuvalayāśva's death King Aśvatara, by propitiating Sarasvatī then, gained perfect skill in poetry and music (which are described), and by propitiating Śiva received Madālasā restored to life, he invited Kuvalayāśva to Pātāla and gave Madālasā back to him Kuvalayāśva had a son by her, and she prattled to the infant, they had three other sons and she named the youngest Alarka

Political, religious and social instruction

129-158

Then followed an exposition of political, religious and social doctrine in the guise of instruction given by Madālasā to Alarka She instructed him in the duties and conduct of a king, in the duties of the four castes and of a brāhmana's life, in the general duties of a gṛhastha and various religious matters, in the duties of a grhastha in detail in the śrāddha ceremonies, in the performance of the Pārvana Śrāddha and the persons to be excluded, in the particular foods, periods, sites and ordinances to be observed in the śrāddha, in the Voluntary śrāddhas and their benefits and proper occasions, in the rules of Virtuous Custom, generally and with much detail, about diet, purification, conduct, holy days and various religious ceremonies

164-187

Rtadhvaja then resigned his kingdom to Alarka and departed to the forest Alarka lived in pleasure, but, being reduced to great straits by his brother and the king of Kāśī, sought relief from Dattātreya Dattātreya spoke about the soul and, on Alarka's asking about religious devotion (yoga), expounded the method, conditions and signs of its proper performance, the attendant ailments and the stages which lead to final emancipation from existence, the way in which a yogi should live, beg, eat and reach his end, the composition, meaning and efficacy of the word "Om ", all omens and their signification, and the seasons for, and the importance of, yoga Alarka then relinquished the kingdom, but his brother, glad at Alarka's conversion, declined it and departed Alarka gave it to his son and departed to the forest This ends Jada's exposition

The Birds' discourse on Jaimini's further questions Discourse on Creation

190-230

Jaimini put further questions, and the Birds answered them by repeating what Mārkaṇḍeya had taught Kraustuki. This discourse runs on to the end of the Purāna

Mārkaṇḍeya, after extolling this Purāna, described the course of creation from Brahmā through Pradhana, and the mundane egg, he discoursed about Brahmā, and explained divine and human time and the four ages. He described the creation of the earth and all it contains, the gods, demons, pitrs, mankind, and the positions assigned them, the origin of the primeval human race and its social and moral evolution, the birth of the nine Sages, Rudra, Manu Svāyambhuva and his descendants, Dakṣa and his offspring, A-dharma and his progeny, especially the goblin Duhsaha and his powers, whose brood of goblins and hags are named with their particular functions, the creation of the Kudas, and the wives and offspring of the rsis and pitrs

233

Mārkaṇḍeya next discoursed of the Manus and manvantaras. He told of the first Manu, Svāyambhuva, and his descendants who peopled the seven Continents. Jambudvīpa was occupied by Agnidhra, and his descendant Bhārata gave his name to India. This introduced the subject of geography.

Geography

Mārkaṇḍeya described the earth and its continents, especially Jambudvīpa, and also Mount Meru, first briefly, and then with full mention of neighbouring forests, lakes and mountains, and the course of the Ganges in the sky and on the earth. He mentioned the nine divisions of Bhārata, and then dealt with India in detail, naming its seven mountain ranges and its scattered hills, and its rivers, distinguishing them according to their sources, in the Himālaya, the Pāripātra, the Vindhya, the Rkṣa, the Sahya, the Malaya, the Mahendra and the Śuktimat ranges. He named the various peoples inhabiting India and its confines, according as they dwelt in the Middle Land (Madhya-deśa), in the north-west, outside northwards, in the north, in the east, in the south, in the west, around the Vindhya mountains and beneath the Himālayas.

Account of the Manus (resumed)

Mārkaṇḍeya related the birth of the second Manu. A brāhmaṇ visited Himavat and met an Apsaras Varuthini; a Gandharva Kali by personating him gained her affection : and she bore a son Svarociṣ. Svarociṣ delivered a maiden Manoramā from a curse and married her, and also rescued her two girl-companions and married them; after living long in heedless pleasure with them, he had three sons whom he established in separate kingdoms by the knowledge called Padminī; and he had by a forest goddess another son Dyutimat who became the second Manu, Svarociṣa; and his period is noticed. The allusion to the knowledge Padmini introduced a discourse on its supporters, the Nidhis.

Continuing, Mārkaṇḍeya related how king Uttama banished his queen for bad temper, and helped a brāhmaṇ to find his ill-tempered wife who had been carried off; he was rebuked by a ṛṣi for his own conduct; he recovered the brāhmaṇ's wife, whose bad temper a Rākṣasa consumed. A Nāga king had taken the queen to Pātāla, and she was hidden; the brāhmaṇ changed her nature and the Rākṣasa restored her to king Uttama; she bore a son, who became the third Manu, Auttama, and his period is noticed.

Mārkaṇḍeya related how king Svarastra when driven from his kingdom, met his deceased queen, and had a son who became the fourth Manu, Tāmasa; his period is noticed. The ṛṣi Rṭavāc made the constellation Revatī fall; a maiden was born therefrom; she married king Durgama and bore a son, who became the fifth Manu, Raivata; his period is noticed. Cākṣuṣa, being changed when an infant by a hag, became king Vikrānta's son, but turned an ascetic and became the sixth Manu, Cākṣuṣa; his period is noticed.

Continuing the manvantaras, Mārkaṇḍeya said the Sun married Tvastr's daughter Saṅjñā and had two sons Vaivasvata and Yama; Saṅjñā quitted him, leaving her Shadow behind, because his splendour was excessive; Tvastr pared his splendour down while the gods hymned the Sun; the Sun regained Saṅjñā; he had by the Shadow a son who will be the eighth Manu, Sāvarni. Vaivasvata is the seventh and present Manu; his period is noticed. The future period of Sāvarni with its ṛṣis, gods, etc., is prophesied.

359-406

The mention of Sāvarni introduced the Devī-māhātmya. Mārkaṇḍeya related that king Suratha, being ousted from his kingdom, met a Vaisya driven from his family, and both consulted a ṛṣi about their longings for home; the ṛṣi ascribed their feelings to the goddess Mahā-māyā (Great Illusion), and related how, when she was lauded by Brahmā, Viṣṇu slew the demons Madhu and Kaitabha.

The ṛṣi then recited her exploits. Here begins the Devī-māhātmya properly. The demons under Mahisa vanquished the gods, and the goddess was formed as Caṇḍikā, (Ambikā) out of their special energies combined; she began a great battle and destroyed the demons, all the demon chiefs and finally Mahiṣa himself. The gods praised her in a hymn, and she promised to befriend them always. Again the gods were vanquished by the demons Śumbha and Niśumbha, and invoked her; she appeared, and Śumbha wanted to marry her but she declined; he sent an army and she destroyed it; he sent another with Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa; the goddess Kali destroyed them and Caṇḍikā gave her the combined name Cāmuṇḍā; Śumbha sent all his armies; Caṇḍikā killed the chief Raktavija, then Niśumbha in spite of Śumbha's aid, and many demons, and finally Śumbha himself; whereat the universe was filled with joy. The gods praised her in a hymn and she promised to deliver them always. She descanted on the merits of this poem. The gods regained their supremacy; and she is extolled. Here ends the Devī-māhātmya properly. After hearing this poem king Suratha worshipped Caṇḍikā, and she promised he should be the eighth Manu, Sāvarni.

Account of the Manus (resumed)

407-426

Mārkaṇḍeya, continuing, mentioned the other future Manus, the ninth, tenth, eleventh and twelfth named Savarna, and the thirteenth named Raucya; and their periods. He narrated the story of Raucya. A Prajāpati Ruci was urged by the Piṭṛs to marry; he propitiated Brahmā and pleased the Piṭṛs in a hymn; they appeared and promised him a wife and extolled his hymn; he married an Apsaras and had a son who will be the thirteenth Manu Raucya. Śānti, the disciple of art irascible ṛṣi Bhūti, finding the sacred fire extinguished, offered a hymn to Agni. Agni restored the fire and promised to Bhūti a son who should be the fourteenth Manu, Bhautya. Bhautya's period is noticed. This account of the manvantaras is extolled.

Commencement of the Genealogies

430

At Krauṣṭiki's request Mārkaṇḍeya began the genealogies. Brahmā created Dakṣa, from whom came Martanda, the Sun. Then mentioning that Brahmā was born from the mundane egg, and produced the lokas (worlds), and next the four Vedas with their merits—Mārkaṇḍeya diverged into a laudation of the Sun.

The majesty of the Sun

432-455

The gods and the Vedas are declared to be manifestations of the Sun. The Sun's glory was at first too great, and Brahmā with a hymn induced him to contract it and then finished the creation. Marīci's son Kaśyapa begot the gods, demons, mankind, etc. The demons overcame the gods and Aditi sought help of the Sun in a hymn He became her son as Mārtaṇḍa and destroyed the demons. The story of the Sun and his wife Saṅjñā (as told in chapters 74 and 75) is re-told here with more detail regarding the Shadow-Saṅjñā, the curse on Yama, the paring down of the Sun's splendour, the hymns offered to the Sun, and the Sun's offspring and the stations allotted them.

Further Mārkaṇḍeya related that king Rājya-varadhana when old resolved to resign the kingdom, but his people in grief propitiated the Sun, and the Sun granted him great length of life; the king similarly obtained the same boon for them. This story is extolled.

The Genealogies resumed

Mārkaṇḍeya mentioned Manu Vaivasvata's seven sons and Ilā-Sudyumna, Purūravas, etc. Manu's son Pūṣadhra killed a brāhmaṇ's cow and being cursed became a sūdra. Karūṣa's descendants were mentioned. Diṣṭa's son Nābhāga married a vaiśya maiden willfully and became a vaiśya; their son Bhanandana conquered the earth, but Nābhāga declined to reign. Then Nābhāga's wife explained that she was not really a vaiśya, but that her father was a king who became a vaiśya under a ṛṣi's curse with a promise of recovery, and that she was a princess and had become a vaiśya under Agastya's curse.

Bhanandana became king. His son Vatsaprī rescued a princess Sunandā from Pātāla after killing a demon king who had a magic club and married her. His son was Prāmśu and Prāṇśu's son Prajāti. Prajāti's son Khanitra was beneficent; his brothers' ministers practised magic to dethrone him but destroyed themselves; Khanitra resigned the kingdom in grief and went to the forest. His son Kṣupa performed sacrifices for the harvests. His son was Vīra and grandson Yivimśa. Yivimśa's son Khanintra while hunting met two deer eager to be sacrificed and by Indra's favour obtained a son Balāśva. Balāśva was called Karandhama because of a fanciful victory.

His son Avīkṣit married many princesses and carried off princess Vaiśāinī at her svayamvara: the suitor kings conquered and captured him, but she refused them all: Karandhama rescued Avīkṣit, but Avīkṣit refused to marry the princess after his discomfiture; she turned to austerities and obtained an assurance from the gods : Avīkṣit's mother by a ruse obtained a promise from him to beget a son : while hunting he rescued the princess from a demon and pleased the gods : she proved to be a Gandharvamaiden and Avīkṣit married her in the Gandharva world; she bore a son Marutta there Avīkṣit returned but refused the kingdom because of his discomfiture. Marutta became king, and was 553 a universal monarch, a great sacrificer, and liberal benefactor to brāhmaṇs. The Nāgas gave great trouble, and he attacked them, but Avīkṣit interposed in favour of the Nāgas; a battle was averted by the ṛṣis, and the Nāgas made reparation. Marutta's wives are named.

His son Nariṣyanta enriched the brāhmaṇs permanently at a great sacrifice. His son Dama was chosen by the Daśārṇa princess, and defeated the suitor kings, who, in violation of marriage laws, opposed him. Dama became king. Nariṣyanta was murdered in the forest by Vapuṣmat one of those kings. Dama bewailed, and vowed vengeance against the murderer; he slew Vapusmat and celebrated his father's obsequies with Vapusmat's flesh and blood.

The Birds closed their long repetition of Mārkaṇḍeya's instruction to Krauṣṭiki, with an encomium on the Purāṇas and this Purāṇa in particular. Jaimini thanked them.

The Curse on Vapu

Jaimini Applies to Mārkaṇḍeya for instruction regarding certain difficulties in the Mahābhārata— Mārkaṇḍeya refers him to four learned Birds, the sons of Droṇa, and narrates their history— Their mother Vapu, an Apsaras, was condemned by the Muni Durvāsas to become a bird for tempting him.

नारायणं नमस्कृत्य नरं चैव नरोत्तमम्।

देवीं सरस्वतीं व्यासं ततो जयमुदीरयेत्॥ ३॥

Having adored Nārāyaṇa, and Nara the best of men, the goddess Sarasvatī, and then Vyāsa, let him utter the verse of Victory!

तपः स्वाध्यायनिरतं मार्कण्डेयं महामुनिम्।

व्यासशिष्यो महातेजा जैमिनिः पर्यपृच्छत्॥ १॥

The illustrious Jaimini, the disciple of Vyāsa, interrogated the great Muni Mārkaṇḍeya, who was engaged in the performance of austerities and the study of the Veda.

भगवन् भारताख्यानं व्यासेनोक्तं महात्मना।

पूर्णमस्तमलैः शुभ्रैर्नानाशास्त्रसमुच्चयैः॥ २॥

जातिशुद्धिसमायुक्तं साधुशब्दोपशोभितम्।

पूर्वपक्षोक्तिसिद्धान्तपरिनिष्ठासमन्वितम्॥ ३॥

"Sir! the high-souled Vyāsa related the story of the Mahābhārata, which is replete with splendid spotless collections of various Śāstras, which is characterized by accuracy regarding the different classes, is embellished with beautiful words, and contains complete knowledge of prima facie assertions, and established conclusions.

यथायुधानां कुलिशमिन्द्रियाणां यथा मनः।

तथेह सर्वशास्त्राणां महाभारतमुत्तमम्॥ ५॥

As Viṣṇu is chief among the gods, as the brāhmaṇa chief among men, and as the crest-jewel chief among all decorations, as the axe¹ is the best among weapons, as the mind best among the organs, so in this world is the Mahābhārata the best among all the Śāstras.

अत्रार्थश्चैव धर्मश्च कामो मोक्षश्च वर्ण्यते।

Here are described both Wealth and Virtue, Love, and Final emancipation from transmigration; these have both reciprocal and peculiar consequences.

धर्मशास्त्रमिदं श्रेष्ठमर्थशास्त्रमिदं परम्।

कामशास्त्रमिदं चाग्र्यं मोक्षशास्त्रं तथोत्तमम्॥ ७॥

It is the best Dharma-śāstra, it is the most eminent Artha-śāstra; it too is the foremost Kāma-śāstra, as well as the noblest Moksa-śāstra.

It has been declared, Sir, by Veda-Vyāsa the wise, to be the authority for the sacred and maxims of the laws of the four periods of a brāhmana's life.

तथा तात कृतं हेतत् व्यासेनोदारकर्मणा।

यथा व्यासं महाशास्त्रं विरोधैर्माभिभूयते॥ ९॥

For this Mahā-śāstra has been so constructed, dear Sir, by Vyāsa the noble in deeds, that although beset with difficulties it is not overthrown by them.

व्यासवाक्यजलौघेन कुतर्कतरुहारिणा।

वेदशैलावतीर्णेन नीरजस्का मही कृता॥ १०॥

The earth has been freed from the dust of passion by the stream of Vyāsa's words, which has descended from the mountain of the Veda, and has swept away the trees of bad reasoning.

Therefore have I come to you, Sir, being desirous to know truly the story of Vyāsa, in which melodious sounds are the geese, the noble story is the splendid lotus the words are the expanse of water, and the Vedas are the great lake this precious and long story of the Mahābhārata

Why was Janārdana Vāsudeva, who is the cause of the creation, preservation and destruction of the world, although devoid of qualities, endued with humanity? And why was Drupada's daughter Kṛṣṇa the common wife of the five sons of Pāndu? for on this point we feel great perplexity.

Why did the mighty Baladeva Halāyudha expiate his brahmanicide by engaging in a pilgrimage? And how was it that the unmarried heroic high-souled sons of Draupadī, whose protector was Pāndu, were slain, as if they had no protector? Deign to recount all this to me here at length; for sages like you are ever the instructors of the ignorant.

Having thus heard his speech, the great Muni Mārkaṇḍeya, devoid of the eighteen¹ defects, began to speak.

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

now arrived, most virtuous Muni¹ and this is not esteemed the season for a long discourse But I will now tell you, O Jaimini, of those birds who will speak to you and so resolve your doubts

Then, thus addressed by the wise Mārkaṇḍeya, replied the Muni pre-eminent, his eyes wide open with astonishment

Jaimini spoke

Very wonderful is this, O brāhmana¹ that those birds have gained knowledge most difficult to be acquired, as if birds possessed human speech If their birth is of the brute creation, whence have they the knowledge? And how is it that those winged ones are called the children of Drona? And who was this famous Drona, who had those four sons Do those virtuous high-souled birds possess the knowledge of righteousness?

मार्कण्डेय उवाच

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

He then, worshipped by them, duly greeted Indra, when he had seated himself, and conversed pleasantly with him

"Then in the course of their talk, Indra said to the great Muni-

Indra said-

'Declare, which of these dancers pleases you most Is it Rambhā, or Karkaśā, or Urvaśī, Tīlottamā, Ghrtācī, or Menakā? or whichever delights you'

Nārada, best of dvījas, hearing this speech of Indra, pondered and then addressed the reverently bending Apsarases — 'She, of you all here present, who thinks herself pre-eminent in beauty, nobility and good qualities, let her dance before me. There is indeed no success in dancing for one who is destitute of good qualities and beauty. Good dancing implies graceful comportment other dancing is vexation.'

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

And immediately on that speech, each one of those bowing ones thus exclaimed—'I excel in good qualities, not you, nor you.' The lord Indra seeing their agitation said, 'Let the Muni be asked, he will say which of you excels in good qualities. What Nārada, sought by those followers of Indra's will, then said, hear that from me

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

Having heard that his sentence, they all exclaimed, with trembling necks, 'this is impossible for us!' Among them an Apsaras named Vapu, confident of perturbing the Muni, replied-

Having thus spoken Vapu departed then to the Snowy mountain to the Muni's hermitage, where the beasts of prey were quelled by the might of his austerities

Stopping at the distance of a call from where the great Muni is seated, the lovely Apsaras sang the cuckoo's melody. Hearing the strains of her song, the Muni astonished in mind went to where sits that beautiful-faced maiden

Then the great Rsi, the performer of mighty austerities, pronounced this sentence "Since you have come here, O maiden! intoxicated with pride, to cause me pain by obstructing my austerities, which are accomplished with difficulty, O Apsaras, therefore shall you, polluted by, my wiath be born in the foolish race of birds for the space of sixteen years, losing your own form, and taking the form of a bird, and four sons shall be born to you, O vilest of Apsaras, and without having gained affection among them, absolved from guilt by dying in the field of battle, you shall regain your dwelling in the sky Never make any reply "

The Birth of the Sparrows

The story of the Birds continued—Kandhara, king of the birds killed a Rāksasa Vidyud-rūpa for killing his brother, and, marrying the Rāksasa's wife, had a daughter by her named Tāksī who was the Apsaras Vapu— She married Drona— When pregnant by him she was killed at the battle of the Kauravas and Pāndavas, and there laid four eggs from which the four Birds were born—The Birds were nourished by the Muni Samika

The king of the birds, Garuda by name, was the son of Aristanemi Garuda's son was renowned as Sampati and his son was Supārśva, heroic, mighty as Vayu Supārśva's son was Kuntī, Kuntī's son was Pralolupa And he had two sons Kanka and Kandhara On the top of Kailasa, Kanka saw the Rāksasa tamed as Vidyud-rūpa, whose eyes were like a lotus leaf a follower of Kubera who was busied in a banquet, clad with strings of bright garlands, sitting in company with his wife on a beautiful clean rocky seat Then the Rāksasa, immediately he was seen by Kanka, filled with

The Rākṣasa with his sword slew Kaṅka, while he was thus speaking, who fell defiled with the streaming blood, quivering and senseless. Having heard that Kaṅka was slain, Kandhara the king of the birds, bewildered with anger, resolved speedily to slay Vidyud-rūpa.

Having gone to the mountain-top, where Kaṅka lay slain, the king of the birds, his eyes swollen with anger and resentment, and sighing like the king of the Nāgas performed the Sankalana for his elder brother. Where sits the slayer of his brother, there he went, rocking the lofty mountains with the mighty wind from his wings. He, with blood-red eyes, overtopping the mountains, and forcibly hurling down masses of clouds with his wings, used to destroy his enemies suddenly.

There he saw that demon, whose thoughts were intent on drinking, whose face and eyes were of a copperish colour, and who was seated on a golden conch, whose crest was covered with strings of garlands, who was adorned with yellow sandal, whose face was very horrible with teeth that resembled the inside of the Ketakī leaf. And he saw, seated on the Rākṣasa's left thigh his long-eyed wife, named Madanikā, whose voice was soft as the cuckoo's. Then Kandhara, whose mind was filled with wrath, addressed that inmate of the cave, "O you of utterly evil soul! Come forth and fight with me. Since you have murdered my trustful elder brother, therefore I will bring you, while engrossed in drunkenness, down to Yama's abode. Today, slain by me, shall you go to all those hells that are the abodes of the murderers of those who trust in them, and of the murderers of women and children."

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

Addressed even thus by the king of the birds in his wife's presence, the Rākṣasa, filled with anger, then answered the bird. "If your brother has been slain, then have I displayed my valour; you, too, today, will I slay with this sword, O bird. Stay a moment, you shall not move here alive, O vilest of birds." Thus he spoke and seized his bright sword that resembled a mass of collyrium. Then took place a marvelous battle between the king of the birds and Kubera's warrior, such as between Garuḍa and Indra.

Then the Rākṣasa, in anger swiftly hurling his sword, black as charcoal, flung it against the king of the birds. And then the king of the birds, slightly springing up from the ground, seized it with his beak, as Garuḍa seizes a serpent; and the egg-born one broke it with his beak and talons, and shook it. Thereupon, the sword being broken, they began to fight with their arms. Then the Rākṣasa, being attacked in the breast by the king of the birds, was speedily deprived of arms, feet, hands and head.

When he was killed, his wife besought protection of the bird: somewhat fearful, she said, "I am your wife." That noble of birds, taking her, returned to his abode, having obtained a recompense for his brother by the slaughter of Vid Yud-rūpa. And she, the daughter of Menakā, with beautiful eyebrows, capable of assuming forms at pleasure, on reaching the house of Kandhara, took a form resembling Garuḍa's. Of her, he then beget a daughter named Tārksī, (namely Vapu the loveliest of the Apsarases, who was consumed by the fire of the Muni's curse). Then the bird gave her the name Tārksī.

And Mandapāla had four sons of boundless intellect, Jaritāri the eldest and Droṇa the youngest, best of dvijas. The youngest of them, righteous in soul, thoroughly read in the Vedas and Vedaṅgas, married her the beautiful Tārksī, with the consent of Kandhara. And after a while Tārksī conceived; when she had gone seven fortnights in her pregnancy, she went to Kurukṣetra. The very terrible battle between the Kurus and Pāṇḍavas was then being fought, and, in consequence of her action being predestined, she entered into the battle.

There, then, she beheld the contest between Bha-gadatta and Arjuna. The sky was thick filled with arrows, as if with locusts. Discharged from the bow of Arjuna an arrow, black as a serpent, fell with great force and pierced the skin of her belly. Her belly being pierced, four moon-like eggs fell on the ground as if on a heap of cotton, from the fact that their allotted period of life was not ended.

At the same time that they fell, fell the great bell, the cord of which was cut by an arrow, from the noble elephant Supratika. It reached the ground evenly all around, cutting into the surface of the ground, and covering the eggs of the bird which lay upon flesh.

And after king Bhagadatta, ruler of men, was slain, the fight between the armies of the Kurus and Pāndavas went on many days. At the end of the battle, when Dharma's son Yudhishtira approached the son of Śāntanu to hear the high-souled Bhīṣma proclaiming the entire laws, a sage named Śamika came to the spot where, O best of dvijas, lay the eggs within the bell.

There he heard the voice of the little birds chirping, whose voices were inarticulate on account of their infancy, although they had transcendent knowledge. Then the Rsi, accompanied by his disciples, lifted up the bell and saw with surprise the young motherless and fatherless birds.

The venerable Muni Śamika, having so seen them on the ground there, filled with astonishment, addressed his attendant dvijas. 'Well was it said by the chief of the dvijas, Uśanas himself, the regent of the planet Venus, when he saw the army of the Daityas intent on fleeing, hard-pressed by the gods.' You must not go, turn you back; why run you away, you feeble ones?

Abandoning valour and glory, where have you gone? You shall not perish. Whether one perishes or whether one fights, one possesses life as long as God originally created, not as long as one's mind desires. Men perish, some in their homes, some in flight; so, too, do they meet their death when eating food and drinking water.

So, too, others, when sporting themselves, seated in the chariot of Love, free from sickness, their bodies unpierced by arrows, fall into the power of the King of the departed. Others, when intent on austerities, are led off by the servants of the King of the departed: and others occupied in meditation and study have not gained immortality. Of yore, Indra hurled his thunderbolt against Śambara, yet that demon, though pierced thereby to the heart, did not perish. By that very thunderbolt, indeed, and by the same Indra, when their time was come, the Dénavas were slain, the Daityas forthwith perished.

Perceiving this, you should not fear: return you. Then those Daityas, abandoning the fear of death, turned back. This speech of Usanas is proved true by these most noble birds, which even in the superhuman battle did not meet with destruction. Whence comes the laying of the eggs, O brāhmanas? Whence comes the even fall of the bell? And how comes it that the ground is covered with flesh, fat, and blood?

Certainly these must be some brāhmanas; they are not ordinary birds. The favour of destiny shows great good-fortune in the world. Having spoken thus he looked at them and spoke again-Return, go to the hermitage, taking the young birds with you. Where these egg-born may have no fear of cat, or rat, of hawk or ichneumon, there let the birds be placed.

O dvijas, what is the use of great care? All creatures are destroyed or preserved by their own actions, as have been these young; birds. Nevertheless men must exert themselves, in all matters; he who does a manly act gains commendation from us, the good.

Thus urged by that illustrious Muni, those young Munis, taking those birds, went then to their own hermitage, delightful to ascetics, where clusters of bees settled on the boughs of the trees. And he, the noblest of dvijas, gathering wild roots, flowers, fruits, grasses, such as his mind loved, performed the various religious ceremonies ordained by the Veda to all the deities, to Viṣṇu, Rudra, and the Creator, to Indra, Yama, and Agni, to Varuṇa, to Bṛhaspati and Kubera, and also to Vayu, to Dhātri and Vidhātri.

The Visit to the Vindhya Mountain

The Story of the Birds continued—The Birds, when full-grown, were endowed with speech, and explained that wonder to the Muni Śamika—They were the four sons of a Rsi Sukrsha— Indra appeared to the Rsi in the form of an aged bird, and asked for human flesh— The Rsi ordered his four sons to sacrifice themselves —They refused, and he cursed them to be born in the brute creation, but, moved with compassion at their entreaty, bestowed on them perfect knowledge— Hence they were born as birds

Thus he, the most virtuous Muni, O princely brāhmana, nourished them day by day with food and water, and in safety After a month they resorted to the sun's chariot-road, being gazed at by the Munis' sons, whose eyes were tremulous with curiosity After seeing the earth, with its cities, and with its ocean and noble rivers, which appeared of the size of a chariot wheel, they returned to the hermitage

The spirited birds were wearied in their souls with their toil and their knowledge was developed there through their energy They all performed the reverential circumambulation around the Rsi, who was expounding the truths of the law in compassion for his disciples, and respectfully saluted his feet and said, 'We have been delivered by you, O Muni' from dreadful death, you have given us shelter, food, and water, you are our father and spiritual guide '

Our mother died, when we were still in the womb, nor have we been nourished by a father you, by whom we were preserved when young, have given us life You, of perfect splendour on the earth, lifting high up the elephant's bell, did purge away evil from us who were withering like worms How may these strength-less ones grow? When shall I see them flying in the sky? When shall I see them alighting on a tree of the earth, settling within the trees? When shall my natural colour be obliterated by the dust which the wind from their wings raises, as they flit about near me? You, dear Sir, thus thinking, did nourish us, now we, those very birds, are grown up and have become wise, what ought we to do?

As he desired, who was diligent in the performance of austerities, and who constantly kept his organs under control, we at once produced fuel, flowers and everything else, and whatever was needed for sustenance Now while he and we thus dwelt in the forest, there came the king of the gods in the appearance of a bird, mighty in size, with broken wings, stricken with age, with eyes of a copperish colour, down-cast in soul desirous to prove that venerable Rsi, who practised truth, purity, and patience, and who was exceedingly lofty in mind, and for the coming of the curse upon us

The Rṣi spoke

Your childhood is past; your youth, too, gone; you are assuredly in the decline of life, O egg-born. Why are you most malign-hearted even in old age, you in whom of all mankind every desire has ceased? What has your last stage of life to do with human flesh? Assuredly no one is created foremost among evil-beings! Or what need have you to address me, being what I am? One should always give when one has promised - such is our professed opinion.

Having thus spoken to him, the Brahmarshi resolved that it should be so. Calling us quickly and commending us according to our good qualities, the Muni, agitated at heart, addressed a most severe speech to us all, who were respectfully bowing, full of faith, with hands reverently joined. You noble dvijas, whose minds are improved, are bound by obligations equally with me.

How for the sake of another's body can a wise man destroy or injure his own body? for a son is even as one's own self. A son pays those debts, indeed, that have been declared due to the pitrs, the gods, and men; a son does not offer up his body. Therefore we will not do this; we have done as has been done by men of old. While alive one receives good things, and while alive one does holy acts. When one is dead, the body perishes, and there is an end of righteousness.

Dear father, high-minded, deign to pardon us miserable ones who dread death, for life is dear to us. In an aggregate of skin bones and flesh, filled with pus and blood, wherein one should take no delight, therein do we find this delight. Hear too, Sir, how people are be-guiled when overcome by those powerful enemies, their faults, love, anger and so forth walls and banks, the flesh and blood for its plaster. Nine gates it has, it is capable of great effort, it is enclosed on all sides with sinews, and there the Sentient Soul¹ sits firm as king. He has two rival ministers, the Intelligence² and the Understanding³; those two strive to destroy each other as foes.

Four enemies desire the destruction of that king, Desire,⁴ Anger, and Covetousness, and Folly⁵ is the other enemy. But when that king closes those gates and stands firm, then he becomes indeed both happily strong and free from alarm, he displays his affections, he is not overcome by his enemies. But when he leaves all the gates open, then the enemy named Passion⁶ assails the gates of the eyes, etc. Gaining an entrance by the five gates, he penetrates everywhere and spreads widely. Then indeed enter, following on his track, the three other terrible enemies.

द्वाराणि च वशे कृत्वा प्राकारं नाशयत्यथ॥६८॥

That very enemy, Passion, having entered there, forms a close union with the understanding, together with the other gates which are known as the organs. He, difficult to be approached, having reduced into subjection the organs and the understanding, and having reduced into subjection the gates, then destroys the rampart.

The Intelligence, seeing the understanding the dependent of that enemy, perishes forthwith. And there, deprived of his ministers and abandoned by his subjects, the king, his strategical points gained by the enemies, perishes. Even so Passion, Folly, Covetousness and Anger prevail, evil in their nature, wrecking the memory of mankind. From Passion springs Anger, from Anger is born Covetousness, from Covetousness arises Folly, from Folly errors of memory, from loss of memory loss of the intellect, through loss of the intellect man perishes. Shew favour, O you most virtuous¹ to us who have thus lost our intellects, who are compliant to Passion and Covetousness, and who covet life. And let not this curse take effect, which you has pronounced, Sir¹ 'Let us not tread the miserable path of darkness, O best of Munis¹'

And since I am besought reverently by you, therefore, when endowed with the nature of brutes, you shall obtain the highest knowledge. And you, having your paths illuminated by knowledge, with the stains of pain removed, free from doubt, shall through my favour gain the highest perfection. Thus, Sir, we were cursed of old by our father through the power of destiny; hence we have descended to a lower grade of created beings for a long time; and we were born on the field of battle; we were nourished by you: thus have we acquired the nature of birds, O brāhmaṇa. There is no man in this world who is not bound by fate.

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

Having heard this their speech, the venerable and eminent Muni Śamika answered those dvijas who stood near him. Even before did I make this remark in your presence, "These are not ordinary birds: these must be some brāhmaṇas, who even in the superhuman battle escaped destruction.'

Then they, permitted by that affectionate high-souled Muni, went to the Vindhya, the goodliest of mountains, clad with trees and creepers. Hitherto have the righteous birds remained on that mountain, engaged in austerities and the study of the Vedas, and resolute in meditation. Thus those Muni's sons gained the hospitality of the noble Muni, acquired the shape of birds, and are dwelling on the Vindhya range, in a cave of the noble mountain, where the water is very sacred, with their minds subdued.

Jaimini visits the Birds, and explaining the reason of his visit, puts them the four questions that perplexed him—After invoking Viṣṇu, Brahmā and Śiva, they explain the first question, why Viṣṇu, though devoid of qualities, is endued with humanity, Thus those birds, the sons of Droṇa, became learned; and they dwell on the Vindhya mountain: visit them and ask them.

Jaimini, having heard this speech of the Rsi Mārkaṇḍeya, went to the Vindhya mountain, where dwelt those righteous birds. And when Jaimini reached that mountain, he heard their voices as they were reading, and having heard filled with surprise, he reflected

The brāhmanas are reading, observing the beauties of the various passages, regulating their breath, without any intermission, distinctly and without faults wondrous is this, methinks, that Sarasvatī does not forsake these Muni's sons, although they are born in the brute creation

One's circle of relatives and a friend and whatever else is desired in one's home—all that forsakes one and departs, Sarasvatī does not abandon one. Thinking even thus, he entered the mountain cave, and entering saw those dvijas standing on a ledge of the rock. Looking at them as they were reading, their faces free from blemish, he then addressed them all, with mingled sorrow and joy

Hail to you, O brāhmanas! Know that I am Jaimini a disciple of Vyāsa, who am come to you, being eager for learning. Verily be you not angry,

In a family of immense wealth some intelligent members, it is said, were born, when their wealth was lost, they were well comforted, O brāhmanas, by Śabara Men after giving to others become beggars themselves, and others, after killing men, have been killed themselves, and others, after having overthrown men, have been themselves overthrown,—those very men, through the decay of austerities

Thus I have very often seen opposites of this kind the world is constantly distressed by the destruction of existence and non-existence. At such thoughts as these in your minds, you should not give way to sorrow so much is invulnerability to sorrow and joy the fruit of knowledge. Then they all did Jaimini honour, by giving him water for his feet, and the arghya offering, and they bowed to him, and questioned him with deep respect

Having paid adoration to Viṣṇu, the lord of the gods, the pre-eminent, the universal soul, the immeasurable, the eternal, and the changeless; to him who subsists in four forms, possessed of the three qualities, and devoid of qualities, the most choice, the most venerable, the most excellent, and the immortal; to him than whom there is nothing more minute, than whom there is nothing more immense, by whom—the unborn one, the beginning of the worlds—this universe is permeated—this universe which, characterized by appearance and disappearance, by visibility and invisibility, has, men say, been created and also been destroyed in the end: and having paid adoration with profound meditation to Brahma, the creator, who purifies the three worlds with his mouths as he utters the Ṛk and Sāman hymns: also having prostrated ourselves before the lord, conquered by one of whose arrows the bands of the Asuras do not interrupt the sacrifices of the sacrificers: we will declare the whole doctrine of Vyāsa, who was wonderful in his actions, by whom, in delivering the Mahābhārata, justice and the other virtues were made manifest.

His first form is inscrutable, the wise behold it bright, it is covered with garlands of flame; it is the acme of perfection to devotees; it is both far and it is near, it is to be understood as transcending attributes; when called Vasudeva, it is seen devoid of egoism; its shape, colour, etc., are not real but imaginary; it is indeed always pure, it is the sole form of pre-eminence

His second form, called Śesa, supports the earth below with its head; it is described as being characterized by the quality of darkness; it belongs to the brute creation

सत्त्वोद्रिक्ता तु सा ज्ञेया धर्मसंस्थानकारिणी॥४९॥

His third form is active, and devoted to the preservation of creatures, it is to be considered as consisting chiefly of the quality of goodness, it is the fashioner of virtue.

चतुर्थी जलमध्यस्था श्नेते पन्नगतल्पगा।

रजस्तस्या गुणः सर्गं सा करोति सदैव हि॥५०॥

His fourth form abides in water; it lies on a serpent as its bed; its attribute is passion; and it is always indeed active.

The third form of Visnu, which is assiduously intent on the preservation of creatures, always maintains righteousness on the earth. It destroys the haughty Asuras, the exterminators of righteousness; it protects the gods, and holy men, who are devoted to the preservation of righteousness. Whensoever, O Jaimini, the wane of righteousness occurs and the rise of iniquity, then it creates itself.

Having taken the form of the man-lion, it slew Hiranya-kaśipu, and destroyed Vipracitti and other Dānavas I cannot now enumerate its other incarnations, those of the dwarf, etc his recent incarnation here was this one in Mathurā

Thus that form, which is characterized by goodness, becomes incarnate; and it is designated Pradyumna, it is occupied in the work of preservation And ever by Vasudeva's will, it exists in divine form, human form, and brute form, and partakes of their several natures.

Then hearing that his son was slain, the Prajāpati Tvaṣṭā enraged, tearing out a single matted lock of hair, uttered this speech. 'Let the three worlds and the gods thereof see my might this day, and let Indra the perverse brahmanicide see, by whom my son when engaged in his own business was destroyed.

Thus having spoken, he, his eyes red with anger, sacrificed that lock of hair in the fire. Then arose Vṛtra, the mighty Asura, encircled with flame, huge in body, with great teeth, resembling a mass of broken collyrium.

He, the enemy of Indra, of immeasurable soul surpassing the might of Tvaṣṭā, mighty in valour, increased daily a bow-shot in stature. And Indra, having seen the mighty Asura Vṛtra eager for his slaughter, unnerved by fear, sent seven Rṣis, desiring peace.

Then the affectionate-minded Rṣis, who delighted in benevolence towards all creatures, brought about friendship and treaties between him and Vṛtra.

When Indra violating the rules of the treaty slew Vṛtra, then his might overwhelmed by the sin of the slaughter waned; and that might which quitted Indra's body entered the wind, which pervades everything, is imperceptible, and is the supreme deity of power.

Baladeva's brahmanicide.

The Birds explain the third question— Baladeva, in order to avoid siding with the Pāndavas and Kauravas, went to the Raivata forest—Overcome by intoxication, love, and the influences of the place, he killed Sūta for not saluting him— To expiate that sin he undertook the pilgrimage

The plough-armed Rama, knowing the perfect affection of Kṛsna for Arjuna, deliberated much— "Can what has been done be better done?"

Without Kṛṣṇa, assuredly, I will not go near Duryodhana, or how, siding with the Pāṇḍavas, shall I slay king Duryodhana, my royal son-in-law and disciple? Therefore I will go neither to Arjuna nor to king Duryodhana.

Arriving at Dvāravatī, which was thronged with glad and well-fed citizens, Rāma Halāyudha drank a draught at the holy bathing places, which are to be visited in future. Having drunk his draught, he then marched to the flourishing park of Raivata,¹ taking with him the intoxicated Apsaras-like Revatī clumps of lotus-flowers, a great forest abounding in pools.

- 1 Āmrataka, the hog-plum, Spondias mangifera, the modern amra. It is both wild and cultivated. I give the botanical names, from Hooker's Flora of British India, of all except the most common, as many of the trees have no English names and are better known by those names. But there can be no doubt that the various species in a genus are not always distinguished and that the Sanskrit names are sometimes as much generic as specific. The descriptions are taken from Roxburgh's Flora Indica, Edn Clarke, 1874, from Oliver's Indian Botany, 1869 and from Firminger's Manual of Gardening for India.
- 2 Bhavya, Averrhoa carambola, the modern kāmraṅga. A garden tree.
- 3 I do not find tindaka in Prof. Monier-Williams' Dictionary. tinduka occurs in verse 14. The late Rev. Dr. Banerjea, in a translation he began, translates it Ebony, which is Diospyros melanoxylon, the modern tindū. It is a large tree, growing in most woody mountainous parts of India.
- 4 Āhīlvaka. I do not find this in the Dictionary. Bilva, the Bel or Bengal Quince, Eagle marmelos, the modern dephul and śrī-phal. Both wild and cultivated. It bears panicles of large white flowers, which are used in worship.
- 5 Jīra, cumin, Cuminum cyminum, the modern jīra, this is a slender cultivated annual. Jīra also means Panicum miliaceum, Roxb., the modern cheena, which is a cultivated cereal from 2 to 4 feet high (Roxb., p. 104). Neither seems appropriate.
- 6 Dādima, the Pomegranate, Punica granatum, the modern dārim or dālīm. A cultivated tree in India.
- 7 Vṛja-pūraka, Citron, Citrus medica, the modern nebu. A cultivated tree in India.
- 8 Panasa, the Jack or Jack-fruit tree, Artocarpus integrifolia, the modern kānthāl. A cultivated tree (Roxb., p. 633, Oliver, p. 272, not in Hooker).
- 9 Lakuca, the Monkey-jack, Artocarpus lacucha, the modern dephul. A garden tree (Roxb., p. 634, Firminger, p. 188, not in Hooker).
- 10 Nīpa, Anthocephalus cadamba (Nauclera cadamba, Roxb.), also kadamba, the modern kadam. A garden tree, highly ornamental with its large, globular, beautiful, orange-coloured heads of flowers, and very useful from its extensive close shade (see Roxb., p. 172).
- 11 Paravata. The Dictionary says this is Diospyros embryopteris (glutinosa, Roxb.), which is the modern gāb. But this tree is also tinduka, which occurs in the next verse and tindaka has occurred in verse 12. Pārāvata means also a dove or pigeon and has been corrupted into the Bengali pāyārā, might not pārāvata, the tree, be corrupted into the Bengali peyārā, which means the Guava, Psidium guajava?

kankola trees,¹² nalina trees,¹³ docks,¹⁴ marking-nut trees¹⁵ emblic myrobalans,¹⁶ and gāb trees¹⁷ bearing large fruits, almond trees,¹⁸ karamcha trees,¹⁹ yellow myrobalans,²⁰ beleric myrobalans²¹ He, Yadu's descendant, saw these and other trees, and also aśokas,²² punnāgas,²³ screw-pines,²⁴ and

- 12 Kankola. I do not find this in the Dictionary. Read kankellān for kankolān? Kankella is given as the Asok, Saraca indica (Jonesia asoka, Roxb.), but this occurs in verse 15.
- 13 Nalina. Dr. Banerjea translates this as the Indigo plant, but Prof. Monier Williams says nalina, neut., is the Indigo shrub, Indigofera tinctoria, while nalina, masc. As here, is the Carissa carandas, but the latter occurs in the next verse.
- 14 Amla-vetasa, the Dock or Sorrel, as Prof. Monier Williams gives it. The Dock is Rumex vesicarius, Roxb. The Sorrel is Oxalis corniculata, Hooker (see Oliver, pp. 181 and 269).
- 15 Bhallataka, the Marking-nut tree, Semecarpus anacardium, the Bengali bhela. A tree, growing in all the mountainous parts of India, with large panicles of small greenish yellow flowers (Roxb., p. 268).
- 16 Āmalaka, the Emblic Myrobalan, Phyllanthus emblica, the modern amla (Roxb., p. 684 and Oliver, p. 279). I do not find it in Hooker. Emblica officinalis is an earlier name.
- 17 Tinduka, Diospyros embryopteris (glutinosa, Roxb.) the modern gāb. It is a tree common in Bengal, and among the mountains in the Circars. Its fruit is as large as a medium-sized apple.
- 18 Inguda, the Almond tree, Terminalia catappa, the modern badām. A beautiful large tree, growing everywhere.
- 19 Karamarda, Carissa carandas, the modern karamcha. A common small tree, with beautiful, white, jasmine-like flowers.
- 20 Haritaka, the Yellow or Chebulic Myrobalan, Terminalia chebula, a large forest tree.
- 21 Vibhitaka, the Beleric Myrobalan, Terminalia belerica, the modern bahera, a large forest tree.
- 22 Aśoka, the Asok, Saraca indica (Jonesia asoka, Roxb.) A middling-sized, very handsome, garden tree, with large, globular bunches of rather large flowers. The flowers are of a beautiful orange colour when they first expand, and gradually change to red, forming a variety of beautiful shades. They are fragrant during the night (Roxb., p. 312).
- 23 Punnāga, Rottlera tinctoria, (Roxb. and Oliver). It is still called punnāg. I do not find it in Hooker. A tree, a native of Coromandel.
- 24 Ketaki, the Screw-Pine, Pandanus odoratissimus, (Roxb. and Oliver), the modern keorā. A large shrub, with panicles of large white, sheath-like leaves, enclosing bundles of closely-packed minute flowers. "It is the tender white leaves of the flowers, chiefly those of the male, that yield that most delightful fragrance, for which they are so universally and deservedly esteemed, for of all the perfumes in the world it must be the richest and most powerful" (Roxb., p. '07).

- 1 Vakula, Mimusops elenghi, the modern bakul A tree, commonly cultivated, with flowers middle-sized drooping white and fragrant, but Firminger says they are small, pale-green (Roxb p 318, Hooker, p 158 Firm , p 490)
- 2 Campaka Michelia champaca, the modern champak or chāmpā A garden tree with large yellow delightful fragrant flowers
- 3 Sapta parna, Alstonia scholaris An ever green tree growing in the drier forests of India
- 4 Karnikara, Pterospermum acerifolium, the Bengali kanak-champa A Himālayan tree, but also grown in gardens It has very large, pure white, fragrant flowers
- 5 Maiati, the Catalonian or Spanish Jasmine, Jasminum grandiflorum the Bengali jāī or chameli, Hindustani chambeli It is a spreading garden shrub with graceful pinnate foliage and middling-sized white fragrant flowers, which retain their odour when dried and are much used for perfume (Firm , p 518) Mālatī also means the Clove-scented Echites Aganosma caryophyllata (Echites caryophyllata Roxb) now called mālatī, which is a climbing shrub with bay-like leaves and sprays of middling sized fragrant white flowers (Roxb , p 245 s Firm , p 618)
- 6 Paryāta Erythrina indica A large tree growing all over India with racemes of numerous large bright scarlet flowers This tree is generally called mandār now
- 7 Kovidara, Bauhinia variegata, the Bengali rakta-kanchan A garden tree with large reddish-purple flowers
- 8 Mandara Prof Monier-Williams says this is Erythrina fulgens, but I do not find it in Hooker or Roxburgh May it be E stricta, which grows in the Western Peninsula and much resembles E indica? In Bengal E indica is now generally called mandār
- 9 Badara, Zizyphus acnophia (jujuba or scandens, Roxb), the Bengali kul the Hindustani ber A small tree with fruit of the size of a large cherry
- 10 Patala Bignonia suaveolens, Roxb , the modern pāṛul I do not find it in Hooker A tree, with large, exquisitely fragrant dark dull crimson flowers It blossoms during the hot season Prof Monier-Williams calls it the Trumpet-flower tree, but I do not find this name in any of the Botanical books I have consulted
- 11 Devadaru, Pinus devdara, Roxb, the modern devdār I do not find it in Hooker A great tree, native of the mountains north of Rohilkhand 'No species of pine is native in the Peninsula (Oliver, p 294), this tree therefore is quite out of place in this Gujarat scene
- 12 Sala, the Śāl tree, Shorea robusta, the modern sāl An immense timber tree
- 13 Tala the Palmyra Palm, Borassus flabelliformis, Roxb , the modern tal Not in Hooker Fans are made from the large fan like leaves

- 14 Tamāla Prof Monier-Williams says this is Garcinia xanthochymus (Xanthochymus pictorius, Roxb) this is a tree, a native of the mountainous districts in India But Roxburgh says the Tamāla is Diospyros coriifolia, which Hooker unites with D montana, this is a common tree
- 15 Kimśuka, Butea frondosa, the Bengali palash Oliver calls this tree the Dhak, (p 195), but I do not find this name anywhere else It is a common tree, with handsome, irregular, orange-red flowers in racemes which are covered with a soft greenish-purple down (Roxb , p 540)
- 16 Vanjūta, Ougeinia dalbergioides (Dalbergia oojemensis, Roxb) A tree with racemes of numerous, rather small, very pale rose-coloured flowers, somewhat fragrant
- 17 Chakora, Caccabis chukor The Chakor is said in Prof Monier-Williams' Dictionary to be the Greek partridge, Perdix rufa, or Tetrao rufus, but the Greek partridge, Caccabis saxatilis, is a different species, inhabiting Europe, from the chakor the Asiatic species The chakor is found in the Himālayas and the other northern ranges It is always a bird of the hills, and does not occur in Gujarat, where this scene is laid (Jerdon's Birds of India Edn Godwin-Austen, Vol II, p 564, Hume and Marshall's Game Birds of India, Vol II, p 33) Tetrao rufus is the name Linnaeus gave the European bird Perdix rufa seems, from the edition of his works in the Bengal Asiatic Society's Library, to be an earlier name There are other partridges in the plains of India, Ortygornis gularis, etc , but I do not think the reference can be to them, for the writer seems to be mentioning birds inhabiting the Himālayas , see the note on the Jivajivaka pheasant, below
- 18 Bhṛṅga-rāja-Prof Monier-Williams translates this, Malabar shrike, Lanius malabaricus This bird stands in Jerdon as Edolius malabaricus, and is, I am informed by Dr J Scully, a king-crow Another bird may be meant, the Malabar Wood shrike, Tephrodornis sylvicola, but, as the writer seems to be referring to birds found near the Himālayas, bhṛṅga-rāja may mean any kind of shrike almost every kind of which is common throughout the greater part of India (Jerdon, Vol I, p 400)
- 19 Kokila, the Koil, Eudynamis orientalis (Jerdon, Vol I, p 342)
- 20 Harita, the Green Pigeon, probably the Bengal green pigeon, Crocopus phoenicopterus, or the Orange breasted green pigeon, Osmotreron bicincta The Southern green pigeon, Crocopus chlorogaster, and the Green imperial pigeon, Carpophaga sylvatica, are not found near the Himālayas
- 21 Jivajivaka Prof Monier Williams gives the synonyms jīva-jīva and jivanjīva, and explains the word as a kind of bird supposed to be a pheasant, or the chakor As the chakor is mentioned already, it must have the first meaning Taking it to be a kind of pheasant, I would suggest that it is the Cheer Pheasant, Phasianus Wallichii The Sanskrit name looks like an onomatopoeous one, and the cry of this bird is "something like the words chir a pir

priya-putras,¹ and pied-crested cuckoos,² and by various other birds, warbling pleasingly and very melodiously—and the lakes, beautiful and placid, crowded on all sides with the lotus water-lilies,³ and lotuses,⁴ and the brilliant blue water lilies,⁵ chir a pir, chir chir, chirwa chirwa "Cheer is the native name. The bird is found in Garhwal and Kumaon and the neighbouring country, and inhabits the middle slope of the Himālayas (Hume and Marshall, Vol I, p 169 Jerdon, Vol II, p 527) If this bird be a pheasant, it is clear the writer is mentioning, not the fauna of Gujarat, but of the country near the Hima-layas, for it appears from Hume and Marshall, and Jerdon, that no pheasants are found in India except in the Himālayan and Indo-Burmese mountains and forests

- 1 Priya-putra I do not know what this bird is. The name affords no indication unless it is the same as the bird 'putra-priya' which was so named because its note resembled 'putra putra' Rāmāy, Ayodh-k (Ed Gorr) cv 11, (Ed Bom) xcvi 12
- 2 Cataka, the Pied-crested Cuckoo. Prof. Monier-Williams says the bird is Cuculus melanoleucus, but I find no such name mentioned in Jerdon. It is the Coccyzus melanoleucos of Jerdon (Vol I, p 339), which he says is called chatak. It is found all over India.
- 3 Kumud, the Lotus water-lily, Nymphaea lotus (Oliver, p 155). There seems to be some confusion in distinguishing between the Sanskrit names for the lotus and the water-lilies, and I would attempt a solution in this and the following notes.
Of the water-lilies, Nymphaea, large water-herbs with leaves and flowers floating on the surface, there are 2 species common in India, viz, N. lotus, the Lotus water-lily, and N. stellata, the Blue water-lily.
N. lotus has leaves 6—12 inches broad, and flowers 2—10 inches broad, white, rose, or red. This species combines Roxburgh's N. rubra and N. edulis (esculenta). Its Sanskrit name is kumud, and probably ambu-ja, the red variety is raktotpala. It closes during the day and opens at night (See Raghu-V, vi 36).
The latter species, N. stellata, has flowers 1—10 inches broad, slightly-odorous. It comprises 3 varieties, (1) cyanea (N. cyanea, Roxb.), flowers medium-sized, blue, (2) parviflora, flowers usually smaller, blue, (3) versicolor (N. versicolor, Roxb.), flowers larger, white, blue, purple, or flesh-coloured. The blue-flowered N. stellata is called indivara, utpala, kuvalaya and nilotpala, (Hooker, Vol I, p 114 Roxburgh, p 427)
- 4 Pundarika, the Lotus or Sacred Lotus, Nelumbium speciosum. This is the only species of Nelumbium in India. It is a large erect water-herb with its leaves and flowers raised high above the water. Its leaves are peltate, cupped, 2—3 feet in diameter. The flowers are 4—10 inches broad, white or rose-red. Its Sanskrit names are kamala, nalini, padmini, pundarika, sarasi-ja, and sahasrapatra. The flower is padma and panka-ja. The red variety is kokanada and tāmarasa. Roxburgh says the white variety is called in Sanskrit śitāmbu-ja, and the red variety raktotpala, but these names more properly designate the white and red varieties of the water-lily (Nymphaea) and with water-lilies,⁶ and lotuses,⁷ and thronged with kādamba geese,⁸ and ruddy shieldrakes⁹ and water-fowl,¹⁰ with kārandava ducks,¹¹ pelicans,¹² geese,¹³ tortoises, and divers,¹⁴ thronged with these and other birds swimming in the water all around.

Prof. Monier-Williams translates them so. The Lotus opens during the day and closes at night (Hooker, Vol I, p 116, Oliver's Indian Botany, p 156) Roxburgh, p 450)

- 5 Nilotpala, the Blue water-lily, Nymphaea stellata, see note on kumud, supra p 29
- 6 Kahlara. Prof. Monier-Williams says this is the White esculent water-lily, Nymphaea lotus, but Roxburgh assigns it to his N. cyanea. Can it mean the rose-coloured variety of the N. lotus or stellata? See note on kumud.
- 7 Kamala the Lotus, Nelumbium speciosum, see footnote 4 on Pundarika. But there must be some difference between the two.
- 8 Kadamba, a kind of goose with dark-grey wings (kalahansa), so Prof. Monier-Williams. It seems to be the Grey Lag-Goose, Anser cinereus, which is called tear-hāns in Behar (Hume and Marshall, Vol III, p 55, Jerdon, Vol II, p 779.)
- 9 Karavāka, the Ruddy Shieldrake or Brahminy Duck, Casarca nitila. Anas casarca is the Linnaean name (Hume and Marshall, Vol III, p 125, Jerdon, Vol II, p 791.)
- 10 Jala kukkuta. This is probably the Water-hen, Gallinula chloropus, commonly called the jal-murghi, which means the same (Jerdon, Vol II, p 718)
- 11 Kārandava, a kind of duck, also called karanda. I would suggest that this is the Common Teal, Querquedula crecca, which is now called kerra in the N. W. Provinces, and kardo in Sindh (Hume and Marshall, Vol III, p, 205, Jerdon, Vol II, p, 806.)
- 12 Plava. Prof. Monier-Williams translates this as pelican, Pelecanus fuscicollis, but I do not find any such species in Jerdon. It may be the Grey pelican Pelecanus Philippensis, which is the most abundant species in India (Jerdon, Vol II, p 858.)
- 13 Hansa. This is of course general, and means any kind of goose or duck.
- 14 Madgu, a kind of diving bird. It is probably the Little Grebe, Podiceps Philippensis, commonly called dub-dubi from its inveterate diving (Jerdon, Vol II, p 822.) But it may be the Bald Coot Fulica atra which is also a ready diver (id., p 715)

So gazing on the delightful forest, Śauri accompanied by the maidens gradually proceeded onwards to an incomparable bower of creepers. There he saw brāhmanas, deeply read in the Vedas and Vedāngas, belonging to the families of Kuśika, and Bhrgu, Bharadvāja, and Gotama, and brāhmanas sprung from various families, all eagerly listening to the tales, seated on large outer garments made of the hide of the black antelope, and on the kuśa grass and on kuśa-grass seats, and Sūta (then bard) in the midst reciting glorious tales of the olden times, based on the deeds of the first Surarshis. Seeing Rāma, whose eyes were red with drinking, all the brāhmanas, perceiving he was intoxicated, rose up in haste, saluting the plough-bearer, except that scion of the bards. Then filled with rage, the mighty plough-bearer, who caused all the Dānavas to quake, rolling his eye, smote Sūta

The Birth of the Sons of Draupadī

The Birds explain the fourth question—King Hariścandra incurred Visvāmītra's anger, and to appease him gives up to him his kingdom and all his wealth—Viśvāmītra ill-treats the queen, and five Viśve Devas censure him for his brutality—He curses them to be born as men, but exempts them from marriage—They were born as the five sons of Draupadī, and died young

The righteous birds spoke

There lived formerly in the Tretā Age a most exalted Rājarsi named Hariścandra, virtuous in soul, a ruler of the earth, brilliant in fame. No famine, nor sickness, nor untimely death occurred among men, nor did the citizens delight in evil, while he ruled as king; nor, further, did the people become uproarious through wealth, valour, austerities or spirituous liquors; nor were any females born who failed to reach womanhood.¹

And he, of mighty arm, when once chasing a deer in the forest, heard women repeatedly crying, "save us"! The king, giving over the deer, called out "fear not! who is this perverse being that, under my rule, behaves with injustice?"

At this interval also the Raudra Vighna-rāja, the opponent of every undertaking, who was following that cry, deliberated :—"This Viśvāmītra, full of heroism, undertaking incomparable austerities, keeping a vow, is mastering the sciences of Śiva and others, which have not been perfected before. Those sciences being mastered by this man, who governs his mind in patience and silence, are verily lamenting, afflicted with dread. How can I manage this? Glorious is this noblest of the Kauśika family; I am much weaker than he : these terrified sciences are thus bewailing: it appears to me difficult to be accomplished. Now this king has come in my way, calling out repeatedly 'fear not!'; into him indeed entering, I will speedily accomplish my desire."

Then the king possessed by that Raudra Vighna-rāja, who had thus taken counsel with himself, uttered this speech in anger :—"Who is this wicked man that binds fire in the corner of his garment, when I the lord am present, gleaming with the glowing splendour of my power? He today, pierced in every limb by my arrows, which in their flight from my bow illumine the other regions of the sky, shall enter upon a long sleep."

austerities, being terrified, suddenly trembled exceedingly like the leaf of the peepul tree¹ When the Muni exclaimed, "wretch!" and "stand!", then the king falling prostrate in reverence addressed him — "O adorable lord! this is my duty! I have committed no fault! Deign not O Muni! to be angry with me, who am engaged in my duty. "The king thus roughly accosted by him replied thus trembling, "am going," and departed hastily drawing his wife in his hand. Thereupon the sage of the Kauśika family suddenly belaboured with a wooden staff the very youthful toil-wearied wife, as the king was drawing her along. Seeing her thus beaten, the king Hariścandra, oppressed with pain, exclaimed "I am going;" nor did he utter aught else.

Viśvāmitra not satisfied demands further fees, and Hariścandra in desperation sells his wife and his son to a brāhmaṇa and himself to a caṇḍāla, and gives Viśvāmitra all the price—Hariścandra earns his livelihood as the caṇḍāla's, servant at a burning-ground in the most abject state for a year—Then he sees a vision of his future transmigration's with a promise of happiness ultimately—His son is bitten by a snake, and the queen brings the corpse to the burning-ground—They recognise each other and bewail their misfortunes—Both resolve to immolate themselves on their son's funeral pile; but the gods interpose and restore his son to life—Dharma explains that he had personated the caṇḍāla—Indra calls the king to Svarga, but he refuses to go without his faithful people—He, and his queen and people ascend to Svarga in perfect bliss. Jaimini spoke :

You have declared this in order according to my questions : great is my curiosity regarding the story of Hariścandra. Ah! passing great was the woe incurred by that magnanimous king; I trust he obtained a happiness fully commensurate, O brāhmaṇas!

Hearing Visvāmitra's speech, the king moved on slowly, full of sorrow, followed by his wife Śaivyā with her young boy. The king having reached the divine city of Varanasi—the choice of Śiva who pronounced that it was not to be enjoyed by men. Distressed with sorrow, he travelled afoot with his compliant wife. On entering the city, he saw Viśvāmitra present.

Seeing he had already Arrived, Hariścandra bowed reverently and, joining his hands respectfully, addressed the great Muni :

Here is my life, and this is my son, and this is my wife, O Muni! "Take that as the choicest arghya offering with which you should quickly deal, should do, deign to excuse that." Whatever else we should do, deign to excuse that.

Viśvāmitra spoke

Gone is the month, O Rājarsi!; let my fee be given me, if your word regarding the Rāja-sūya sacrifice be remembered.

Hariścandra spoke

Thus having spoken the brāhmaṇa departed and the Raja then took thought—"How shall I give him the fee which has been promised? Whence can I find powerful friends? Whence can I get wealth at this moment? Blameworthy is my present: how can I escape going downward? How much more am I abandoning life! To what region shall I, who am nothing, go, if I perish without having performed my promise? I shall become a robber of brāhmaṇas, a worm, a wicked man, the vilest of the vile; or I shall become a slave—better indeed let me sell myself."

Then his wife in words broken with weeping answered the king, who was distressed, dejected, anxious, with downcast face—"Leave off care, O Mahārājā; preserve your truthfulness; a man destitute of truth should be avoided like a burning-ground. There is no higher righteousness, they say, for a man than this, namely, maintaining his truthfulness, O noble man! Oblations to consecrated fire, or study, or the whole circle of good deeds, such as liberality, etc. are fruitless in him who speaks at random. Truthfulness is constantly declared in the Dharma-śāstras to tend to the salvation of men of understanding; and falsehood to the overthrow of men of uneducated minds. A king named Kriti, after offering seven horse-sacrifices and a Rāja-sūya sacrifice, fell forthwith from Svarga for falsehood.

Hearing this proposal, the king lost his senses; and on regaining consciousness lamented, sorely grieved : —"Dire is this grief, O lady, that you thus mentioned to me : is your joyous intercourse with me, wretch that I am, forgotten? Ah! alas! how could you suggest this, O sweet-smiler. Repugnant is this plan : how can I execute it?" Thus having spoken, the king, repeating the word "Shame! shame! "fell to the ground overwhelmed by faintness. Seeing the king Hariścandra prostrate on the earth, the queen full of sorrow, uttered these piteous words :

The queen spoke

"Alas! Mahārājā! from whom has come this evil thought, that you, who are accustomed to coverings made of the hair of the spotted deer, has fallen on the bare ground? Here sleeps the king, my lord, on the ground—he, by whom ten thousands of choice cattle and wealth were dispensed among brāhmaṇas. Ah! woe! what has this king done to you, O brāhmaṇa, that he, the equal of Indra and Viṣṇu, has been reduced to a state of coma?" Having soliloquised thus, she, beautiful-hipped, fell swooning, crushed by the intolerable great weight of her husband's misfortunes. The child seeing his parents lying thus helpless on the ground, being excessively hungry and very unhappy, spoke:—"Father, dear father, give me some food; mother, mother, give me something to eat. I have become dreadfully hungry, and the tip of my tongue is growing parched."

At this interval arrived Visvavmitra great in austerities; but, seeing Hariścandra lying on the ground in a swoon, he sprinkled the king with water and addressed him thus : "Rise up, rise up, O supreme king; give me the fee I desire."

A debtor's misery increases from day to day. Then being refreshed with the snow-cold water, the king, recovering consciousness, and perceiving Viśvāmitra, again fell into a swoon, and the Muni grew angry. The brāhmana, making the king recover, spoke :—"Let my fee be given me, if you regard righteousness. By truth the sun sheds warmth, in truth the earth stands firm, truth in speech is the highest righteousness. Svarga is based on truth. Also a hundred horse-sacrifices and truth are placed in the balance—truth verily outweighs the hundred horse-sacrifices. Otherwise what motive is there for my speaking thus peaceably to you, base one, evil-intentioned, and cruel, false in speech? Since you are powerful as king, let this my kindly feeling be heeded. If O king, you shall not give me the fee today, when the sun reaches the Western mountain, then I will assuredly curse you."

Having spoken thus the brāhmana departed; and the king remained, weak with terror, fugitive, vile, indigent, harassed by the malicious and the rich. His wife again spoke thus— "Let my proposal be complied with, lest consumed by the fire of his curse you perish." But the king, thus urged by his wife again and again, replied— Lady, here without pity I proceed to sell you, what even the malicious could not do, that do I, if my voice be able to utter so hard a speech as this.

A certain aged brāhmana approaching accosted the king— "Deliver the slave-girl to me, I am a purchaser, paying ready money. I have no little wealth, and my wife is very young; she cannot perform the household duties, therefore give me this girl. This wealth is proportionate to the skill, age, beauty and disposition of your wife. Take it, deliver me the maiden."

When thus addressed by the brāhmaṇa, king Hariścandra's mind was lacerated with grief; nor did he make him any reply. Thereupon the brāhmaṇa binding up the money in cash in the end of the king's bark-cloth dress, dragged off the queen, seizing her by the hair. But the child Rohitāśva, who had a boy's side-locks of hair, and who was clutching her dress with his hand, wept on seeing his mother dragged away.

See! come my child to me your mother thus sold into slavery. Do not touch me, my royal child! I must not be touched by you now! Then suddenly the boy seeing his mother dragged along, ran to her crying "Mother!" with tear-soiled eyes. The brāhmaṇa purchaser, seeing the child had approached, kicked him with his foot; the latter, however, exclaiming "Mother!" did not leave hold of his mother.

Accordingly then he bound that money in the king's upper garment, and taking the boy bound him close together with his mother. Seeing them both, his wife and son, led away, the king lamented sorely grieved, sighing deeply again and again. "My wife whom neither the wind, nor the sun, nor; the moon, nor the populace formerly gazed on, here she is, fallen into bondage. Here is my boy, who is sprung from the Solar race, and whose hands and fingers are very young, disposed of by sale. Shame on me, sorry fool that I am! While the king was thus lamenting, the brāhmaṇa taking them both disappeared hastily among trees, houses and other high objects. Then Viśvāmitra meeting the king, demanded the wealth; Hariścandra delivered that money to him. Considering those riches, procured by the sale of the wife, insufficient, Kauśika enraged addressed the sorrow-stricken king.

When he had so spoken, the low out-caste then, glad in mind, giving that pelf to Viśvāmitra, bound the king and led him, bewildered by blows of the staff, his senses utterly confused, grieved at his separation from his loved kindred, to his town.

Then king Hariścandra, dwelling in the caṇḍāla's town, at morning, noon and evening sang this : "My downcast girl seeing before her my downcast son, filled with grief, remembers me;" hoping 'the king will free us both, by giving, when he has amassed wealth, more wealth than this to the brāhmaṇa.' CHAPTER 9

The Battle of the Mainā and the Heron

Vasiṣṭha, enraged with Viśvāmitra for his cruelty to Hariścandra, cursed him to become a heron, and Viśvāmitra cursed Vasiṣṭha to become a mainā—Both Munis as gigantic birds have a terrible fight, and are at length pacified by Brahmā.

1 Āḍi, also called Śārāḥ. The dictionaries all say this bird is Turdus gin-ginianus, which is the old name. It is Jerdon's Bank Maina, Acridotheres gin-ginianus, which is common throughout Upper India, and burrows in the river banks (vol II, p 326). Jerdon gives salik (Śārikā) as the general Bengali name for mainas, but I do not trace either of these two words in his book.

2 Vaka Prof. Monier-Williams called this bird Ardea nīva, but I do not find this name in Jerdon. Bak, bag, (Bengali) and baglā (Hindi) are the general modern names for various kinds of common herons, egrets and bitterns. The Large Egret (Herodias alba, Jerdon), the Smaller Egret (H. egrettoides), and the Little Egret (H. garzetta) are all white, the Cattle Egret (Buphus coromandus) and the Pond⁹ Heron, generally known as the Paddy-bird, (Ardeola leucoptera), which are most commonly called bag and baglā, have white bodies (Jerdon, vol II, pp 744-751).

Since that king, truthful, tranquil, devoid of envy even towards an enemy, faultless also, upright in soul, vigilant, a relier on me, has been reduced to the last extremity together with his wife dependants and son, has been expelled from his kingdom by Viśvāmītra, and has been greatly worsted, therefore that impious brāhmana-hater, uprooted from among the wise, blasted by my curse, the fool, shall be turned into a heron "¹

And then those two, of wide heroism, assailing each other with blows of their wings, created sore fear among the creatures. The Heron, his eyes swollen with blood, lifting his wings beat the Mainā, and he also, stretching out his neck, struck the Heron with his feet. Overthrown by the wind from their wings, mountains fell down on the earth, and struck by the downfall of the mountains the earth quaked, and the earth, as it quaked, caused the waters of the seas to swell up, and reeled over on one side, turning towards the descent to Pātāla

Living beings perished, some by the fall of the mountains, others by the waters of the seas, others through the quaking of the earth. Thus everything being terrified was turned into lamentation, bereft of consciousness; the world was greatly agitated, and its countries were thrown into confusion, people exclaiming "Ah, my child! ah my beloved child! come, here I am fixed"—"ah my darling wife!" – "my beloved husband!" – "this rock is falling, escape quickly."

Thereupon the forefather, the god, seeing the destruction of the worlds, and desiring the welfare of both of them, dissipated their brute-nature; and the god, the lord of creation, addressed them both, clothed in their former bodies, Vasiṣṭha and the noble descendant of Kuśika, the state of darkness having been dispelled :—"Stay you, my beloved Vasiṣṭha, and you, most virtuous Kauśika, this contest that, while involved in the state of darkness, you desire to carry on. This outcome of the Rāja-sūya sacrifice of king Hariścandra, and this war between you two, are causing the earth to waste away. Nor moreover does that best of the Kauśikas offend against that king, for since he has caused him to attain to Svarga, O brāhmaṇa! He occupies the position of a benefactor. Conversation between a father and son

Jaimini asks the Birds for instruction how living beings come into existence and die, and how the foetus lives and develops—The Birds repeat the explanation that a wise young brāhmaṇa Sumati, who was nick-named Jaḍa¹ because of his apparent stupidity, but who remembered his former existences, gave his father—He explains how death occurs, and describes the after-existences through which a living being passes according as it has lived well or ill— He describes incidentally the hell Raurava.

Jaimini spoke

Declare my doubt, when I enquire, O powerful brāhmaṇas, wherein the appearance and disappearance of living beings consist. How is an animal produced? How too does it develop? How, again, is it placed when contained within the womb, pressed upon by the limbs? How, again, when it has issued from the womb, does it grow? And how at the moment of departure is it deprived of the sentient state? Every dead person also experiences the results of both his good and his bad deeds, and how then do those deeds bring about² their results to him? Why does the foetus not become digested there in the stomach, as if it were converted into a morsel of food?

In the female's belly, where the various foods consumed are digested although highly indigestible, how is it that the little animal is not digested there? Declare all this to me, free from doubtful terms; this very matter is a transcendent mystery, where men do err.

That being known, all this body of religious rites, called Re Yajus and Sāman, is worthless, and does not appear fittingly to me. Of what use consequently are the Vedas to me, who am mature in wisdom, satiated with the knowledge of the gurus, void of desires, virtuous in soul? I will gain, O brāhmana! the highest seat, that Supreme Soul, which is exempt from the qualities of the sixfold actions, pain, pleasure, joy, and love. Hence, O father, I will abandon this well-known series of pains which is tainted by love, joy, fear, inquietude, anger, resentment and old age, and which is hampered with hundreds of nooses in close contact ensnaring one's own self as game, and I will depart. Does not the duty enjoined by the three Vedas, which abounds in unrighteousness,¹ resemble the result of sin?

Hence he, who has offered presents of water and has given food and drink, obtains joy therefrom in adversity. He also, who has bestowed food with a mind purified by faith, is then satisfied even without food. He, who has not spoken untruth, nor caused a breach of amity, a faithful believer, meets a happy death. Men who have been intent on the worship of the gods and brāhmaṇas, and who are unspiteful,¹ fair,

Men, who do not give away water nor give away food, endure then, on the approach of death, burning thirst and hunger. Those who give away fuel overcome cold; those who give away sandal overcome heat; and those who do not inflict distress overcome the woeful life-ending pang. Those who cause error and ignorance suffer grievous terror; base men are oppressed with intense pains. A false witness, a liar, and he who teaches evil, they all and also blasphemers of the Vedas die in delusion.

Then Yama's officers, terrific, foul-smelling, carrying hammers and maces, hard-hearted, approach the false man. When they meet his eyesight, trembling seizes him, and he bewails without ceasing his brother, mother, and children. His voice seems thick, O father! and monotonous; and his sight wanders through terror; and his mouth grows dry with his breathing; his breathing grows loud; his sight fails; next he is pervaded with pains; then he quits the body. Preceded by the vital airs he assumes another body, similar to the former, produced by the actions of the former, intended for chastisement, born of no mother and father, like the previous one, with the periods of life and death conformable thereto.

Thereupon Yama's messenger speedily binds him with cruel fetters; drags him, bewildered as he is with the blows of his staff, to the southern region. And so, to some place which is rough with kuśa grass, thorns, ant-hills, stakes, and stones, where a fire is raging, which abounds in hundreds of holes, and which is heated by the blazing sun, which is scorched by his rays, he is haled by Yama's emissaries, terrible through their ghastly cries. Being dragged about by those fearful servants, being eaten by hundreds of she-jackals, he, the evil-doer, proceeds by an awful road to Yama's abode.

While the body is being burnt, he experiences a great burning; also while it is being beaten, and while it is being divided into pieces, terrible agony. While the body is being wetted a living being endures a very long pain, even while it is inhabiting another body, through the consequences of its own acts. There the deceased feeds on the water that his relatives offer together with the sesamum seed and the cake that they offer. The anointing with oil by relations, and the kneading of the limbs that they perform—a living being is nourished thereby, and by what his relations¹ eat. A living being does not encounter excessive affliction on the earth through his deceased relatives; and so when dead he is nourished by his relatives who make gifts.

Being led off he sees his own abode for twelve days and he enjoys the water, cake etc., that are offered on the earth. After twelve days, the man who is being carried off, next sees Yama's city, awful, made of iron, terrible in appearance. Immediately he has gone there he beholds Yama, with fiery red eyes, like to a mass of broken collyrium; in the midst of Death, the destroyer Time and others; his mouth gaping with projecting teeth, his countenance dreadful with frowns; a lord, surrounded by hundreds of deformed, horrible and crooked diseases; busy in awarding punishment, with long arms, a noose in his hand, very formidable. Then the living being takes the happy or miserable course decreed by him. But the false witness goes to Raurava, and the man who is untruthful. Listen while I describe the nature of that Raurava.

Raurava² is in truth two thousand yojanas in size. Then there is a chasm, just knee-deep, very difficult to pass over: in it charcoal is heaped up and made level with the ground. It burns vehemently with its glowing surface of kindled charcoal. In its midst Yama's servitors cast the evil-doer. He runs about there, being burnt by the violent flame; and at each step, his foot is wasted and consumed again and again; day and night he continues on the move.

When he has thus passed over a thousand yojanas he is released, and then enters another similar hell Niraya,¹ to purge away his sins. Afterwards when he has passed through all the hells, the sinner enters the brute creation, among worms, insects and birds; among carnivorous animals; among mosquitoes and such like. After having been born among elephants, trees and such like, among cattle, and among horses also; and among other evil and noxious creatures; he attains humanity, and is born a man, contemptible as a hunch-back or a dwarf; among caṇḍālas, pukkasas and such-like castes; and then accompanied by the remainder of his sin and merit, he enters the castes in ascending order, such as śūdras, vaiśyas, kings and so on; also the position of brāhmaṇas, the gods and Indra. Sometimes in descending order, and thus evil-doers fall headlong into the hells.

What happens to righteous-doers, listen while I declare that. They take the holy course decreed by Yama. Bands of Gandharvas singing, beavies of Apsarāses dancing, brilliant with various celestial garlands, bedecked with strings of pearls and anklets and gay with music,² and heavenly chariots beyond compare go forth quickly to them. And when they descend therefrom, they are born in the family of kings and other high-souled men: there observing upright conduct, they experience vigorous³ pleasures, and afterwards they go upwards; and otherwise, when they take the downward path, they become men as before.

Conversation between the father and son

Sumati (Jaḍa) explains how living beings are conceived and born, and mentions the evils of all existence.

The son spoke

Now human impregnation of women is a seed sown in darkness; immediately it is discharged it sets out from Naraka or Svarga. Dominated thereby the two seeds attain firmness, O father! and next the character of a speck—of a globule—of a ball of flesh. As there may be a minute seed in the ball of flesh, so it is called a germ. So the five limbs up-grow according to their parts; and the minor limbs also, the fingers, the eyes, the nose, the mouth, and the ears, grow out of the limbs; similarly the nails and other features grow out of them.

In the skin is developed the hair of the body, and afterwards the hair of the head. The womb verily increases in size equally with it. Just as the cocoa-nut enlarges together with its shell, so it grows in size. The womb is situated with its mouth downwards. But at the bottom of the womb the foetus develops, placing its hands on either side of the knees : and its thumbs are placed upon the knees, and its finger in front of them; behind the knees are the eyes, and between the knees is the nose; and the buttocks rest on the heels; the arms and legs lie outside.

In this way gradually grows the human being, when contained in a woman's womb: in the womb of other creatures, the position of the foetus corresponds to its form. The gastric fluid² renders it firm. It lives on the food and drink taken by its mother. Thus the gestation of a living creature is meritorious, and constitutes a means of obtaining merit. Also the cord, which is called Āpyāyanī, is fixed in its navel, and it becomes fixed in the belly of women. As women's food and drink penetrate into their womb, the foetus increases in size, its body being nourished thereby.

Numerous matters of its transmigrations occur to its memory; hence distressed on this side and on that it becomes dispirited, thinking, ' Never again will I thus act, when once I am delivered from this womb; assuredly I will so strive that I do not again undergo conception.

born in the ninth or tenth month. While it is being expelled, it is pained by the wind of the prajāpatis, and it is expelled wailing, being pained at heart by its sufferings. And when expelled from the belly, it falls into an intolerable swoon; and it gains consciousness when it comes into contact with the air.

तया विमोहितात्मासौ ज्ञानभ्रंशमवाप्नुते॥ १९॥

Thereupon Vishnu's magical power, which effaces consciousness, assails it; its soul being stupefied thereby, it loses its knowledge.

Thereafter the human being, bereft of knowledge, enters on childhood; and afterwards on boyhood, youth and mature age; and again the human being undergoes death, and so birth. Hence he revolves in this round of mundane existence, like the jar and rope at a well.

Sometimes a man reaches Svarga, sometimes Niraya; and sometimes the dead man goes to Naraka and Svarga. Some-times indeed re-born here, he obtains the consequences of his own actions; and sometimes the man who has consumed the consequences of his actions, passes at death with a very small remainder. And hence he is sometimes born here with a scanty stock of good and evil, having almost consumed them in heaven¹ and in hell,² O brāhmaṇa!

नरकेषु महदुःखमेतद्यत्स्वर्गवासिनः।

दृश्यन्ते तात मोदन्ते पात्यमानश्च नारकाः॥ २५॥

In the hells there is this very great suffering that the dwellers in Svarga are visible thence, O father; and the denizens of hell rejoice,³ as they are hurled down.

गर्भवासे महदुःखं जायमानस्य योनितः।

जातस्य बालभावे च वृद्धत्वे दुःखमेव च॥ २८॥

Even in Svarga there is an unparalleled pain in that from the very time of ascension there this thought revolves in one's mind, 'I shall fall from hence': and from viewing the hells great suffering is felt; day and night one is cheerless, thinking 'I shall go this course.' One who is being born has great suffering in remaining in the womb; and after birth one has suffering in childhood and old age.

कृष्यमाणश्च याम्यैश्च नरकेषु च पात्यतः।

पुनश्च गर्भो जन्माथ मरणं नरकस्तथा॥ ३०॥

The connexion also between desire, envy and anger is grievous to bear in youth; and old age is almost all suffering; the heaviest suffering lies in death. Both for him who is borne off by Yama's messengers, and for him who is hurled down to the hells, there are again destined both conception, and birth, death and hell.

So in this round of mundane existence creatures revolve about, like the jar and rope at the well; and having been bound with the fetters of nature, they are bound repeatedly. No pleasure is there a

I have described to you first the hell Raurava, now listen to the description of the hell named Mahā-raurava,² O father! There fore, seven times five thousand yojanas all around the earth is made of copper; beneath it³ is fire. Heated by the heat thereof the whole region shines with a light equal to that of the rising moon, most intensely severe to sight touch and the other sensations.

Burnt and confounded, he exclaims repeatedly, "Father! Mother! Brother! Dear one!" Full of fear he can get no repose. In this manner therefore emancipation from existence is attained to by violent men, who evil-minded have committed sin, in ten thousand times ten thousand years.

Moreover there is another hell named Tamas;¹ it is bitterly cold naturally; it is as long as Mahā-raurava, and is enveloped in darkness. Men, who slaughter cow and their own brothers and who have destroyed water, food and killed children, all of them fall into that cold hell.²

Next there is another notable hell, known as Nikṛntana.³ In it potter's wheels revolve incessantly, O father! (Men, who speak invisible as visible, unheard as heard, who are so wicked that even do not believe in religious teachers, do not hear their words and sayings of scribes, such) human beings are mounted thereon and are cut by the string of Fate which is borne on the fingers of Yama's servant, from the sole of the foot to the head; and these men do not lose their life thereby, most virtuous brāhmaṇa! and their portions severed in hundreds reunite, In this way sinners are cut in sunder during thousands of years, until indeed the whole of their sins are consumed.

dogs also bark there, with long muzzles, with large teeth, formidable as tigers. Then gazing at that forest before them, with its cool shades, the living beings hasten thither, oppressed with raging thirst, crying 'Ah mother! ah dear one!' in deepest woe; their feet burnt by the fire lambent on the ground. When they wend there, a wind blows, that hurls down the sword-leaves, and so casts the swords down upon them.

Thereupon the terrific dogs quickly rend many limbs from the bodies of those wailing ones. I have, described this Asipatra-vana to you, dear father!

In consequence of that act I was consigned to a very terrible hell, fearful with flames of fire, infested with birds with iron beaks, muddy by reason of the streams of blood that flowed from limbs crushed by machines, pervaded with the sound of blood pouring down from sinners who are being cut asunder.

of their torments, and I too gained a bliss supreme, such as the celestial beings enjoy in Svarga. And with eyes fixed in a wide gaze of joy, in wonder at what this was, we saw at hand a peerless perfect man, and Yama's dire servant, staff in hand, like Indra's thunderbolt, was showing the path in front, and a voice came saying "come hither!" Then that man seeing the hell filled with hundreds of tortures, moved with compassion, addressed that servant of Yama

The man spoke

Ho! servant of Yama! say, what sin have I committed, for which I have incurred this deepest hell, frightful for its torments? Known as Vipāścīt, I was born in the family of the Janakas, in the country of Videha, in very truth a guardian of men

I sacrificed with many sacrifices, I protected the earth with uprightness, nor did I let fighting rage, nor guest departed with averted countenance, nor did I offend the pitrs, the gods, the rsis or my servants, nor did I covet other men's wives, or wealth, or aught else belonging to them

At the moon's changes the pitrs, on other lunar days the gods, voluntarily approached mankind¹ as cows a pool. The two religious duties, both sacrifice and meritorious work, perish inasmuch, as the performers of domestic sacrifices depart sighing with averted faces

The merit amassed in seven lives is dissipated by the sighing of the pitrs, the sighing assuredly destroys the destiny that springs from three lives. Hence I was ever indeed kindly disposed to what concerned the gods and the pitrs, being such, how have I incurred this very terrible hell?

Jada's² narrative (continued)— The conversation with Yama's officer. Yama's officer tells king Vipāścīt why he was condemned to hell — He explains to him the nature and results of good and evil deeds generally, and mentions at great length the punishments awarded to various special sins

The wife whom you had, a princess of Vidarbha, named Pivarī—her season of aptitude for sexual intercourse was formerly rendered barren by you, who was enamoured of the resplendent Kaikeyī; hence for the transgression in the matter of her season you have incurred, Sir! a dreadful hell such as this.

Yama's officer spoke

As the Fire expects the fall of the liquid butter at the time of the Homa oblation, even so does Brahmā expect the deposit of seed at the approved season. A righteous man who disregarding that season, may become absorbed in objects of desire, would still incur sin by reason of the debt due to his ancestors and would fall into hell.

Pained by the wounds in every limb, why are these men, who have wrought iniquity, struck by the onslaught of the iron beaks day and night.

एताश्चान्यश्च दृश्यन्ते यातनाः पापकर्मिणाम्।

Tell me without reservation, through what maturing of their acts are these and other torments seen among sinners.

यमकिङ्कर उवाच

पुण्यापुण्ये हि पुरुषः पर्यायेण समश्नुते।

भुञ्जतश्च क्षयं याति पापं पुण्यमथापि वा॥ १६॥

Yama's officer spoke

Since you ask me, O king, concerning the rise of the fruits of sinful actions, I will tell you that succinctly and correctly. A man verily attains merit and demerit in regular order; and his sin or his merit diminishes as he consumes it.

न तु भोगादृते पुण्यं पापं वा कर्म मानवः।

परित्यजति भोगाच्च पुण्यापुण्ये निबोध मे॥ १७॥

दुर्भिक्षादेव दुर्भिक्षं क्लेशात्क्लेशं भयाद्भयम्।

मृतेभ्यः प्रमृता यान्ति दरिद्राः पापकर्मिणः॥ १८॥

But no human action, whether virtuous or sinful, quickly cleanses except by consumption. Diminution arises through consumption. And he abandons merit and demerit through consuming it; hearken to me! From famine indeed to famine, from affliction to affliction, from fear to fear go needy sinners, more dead than the dead.

व्याघ्रकुञ्जरदुर्गाणि सर्पचौरभयानि तु॥ २०॥

हताः पापेन गच्छन्ति पापिनः किमतः परम्।

A manifold course do creatures take through the fetters of their actions. From festival to festival, from Svarga to Svarga, from happiness to happiness go the faithful, and the peaceful, the rich, and the doers of good. But sinners, when slain by sin, encounter perils from beasts of prey and elephants, terrors from snakes and thieves; what surpasses this?

Thus men's merit and demerit are amassed in the sum of many hundreds of thousands of lives : they spring from the germs of pleasure and pain.

यथा बीजं हि भूपाल पर्यासि समवेक्षते॥ २३॥

A trifling sin committed by a man, when it reaches the place and time, inflicts the pain produced by a thorn, when the foot is planted down heedlessly.

तत्रभूततरं स्थूलशङ्कुकीलकसम्भवम्॥ २५॥

दुःखं यच्छति तद्वच्च शिरोरोगादिदुःसहम्।

Then it inflicts the acuter severe pain that caused by pins and wedges, and likewise scarcely endurable headaches and other pains.

It causes the pains engendered by eating unwholesome things, by cold, heat, fatigue, inflammation and such like. Moreover sins have regard to one another amid the confluence of their results. In this way heinous sins have regard to the deteriorated state of protracted illness etc., and they verily tend to the consequences produced by weapons, fire, calamity, pain, imprisonment, and so forth.

स्वल्पं पुण्यं शुभं गन्धं हेलया सम्प्रयच्छति॥ २८॥

कर्मणा मनसा वाचा न कदाचित्त्वचिन्नरः।

A trifling good deed confers at once a pleasing fragrance, or touch, or sound, taste, or shape; more marked likewise after a long time, and great when arising at the proper period. And in this way pleasures and pains spring indeed out of good and bad actions. A man stays here consuming the productions of numerous mundane existences. And the results of knowledge or ignorance are checked by race and country, and remain there united merely by outward sign to the soul.

Never and nowhere does the man exist who do not a wicked or holy act in body, mind, or speech. Whatever a man receives, whether pain or pleasure, whether great or insignificant, it produces a changed condition of the mind; by so much either his virtue, or on the other hand his sin, gradually diminishes by consumption, just like food that is being eaten. In this way these men, dwelling within hell, diminish their awful heinous sins by torments day and night.

Likewise O king, they consume their virtues in the company of the immortals in Svarga with the songs and other joys of the Gandharvas, Siddhas and Apsarases. In the condition of a god, and a human being, and a brute creature, one consumes good or evil, arising from virtue or sin, and characterized by pleasure or pain.

4 Pipilika, the modern pipirā or piprā denotes the larger species of ants

5 Nispava, this appears to be a general name for most kinds of pulse

6 Tittiri, the Francolin or Meadow partridge, of which there are two species in India, (1) the Black partridge Francolinus vulgaris (the modern tittir or kala tittir) which is found throughout the whole of Northern India, and (2) the Painted partridge, F. pictus (also called kala-tittir) which is found in Central and part of Southern India (Jerdon, vol II, pp 558 and 561) The former is probably the bird meant here

7 Hārīta, see note on p 24

8 Krakara Prof. Monier-Williams says this is Pardis sylvatica, but I do not find any such name in Jerdon. It is probably either the Grey partridge Ortygionis ponticerrana, which is common throughout the greater part of India, or the Kyah partridge, O. gularis, which is found throughout Behar and Bengal (Jerdon, vol II, pp 569, and 572)

Anasūyā's gain of a boon.

The father asks Jada for instruction on yoga or religious devotion—Jada begins a long exposition, which starts with a story of Anasūyā. A certain brāhmana was cursed by Māndavya at night that he should die at sunrise, and his devoted wife restrained the sun from rising—All activity ceased, and the gods in alarm, besought Atri's wife Anasūyā—At her exhortation the wife relents, the sun rises, and the brāhmana dies, but is restored to life by Anasūyā—Anasūyā obtains from the gods the boon that Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva should be born her sons, and that she should attain yoga.

You has declared to me, O son, the established nature of mundane existence which should be shunned exceedingly, a nature which is immutable like the rope and bucket at a well. I have thus then learnt it in its entirety such as it is. Say, what must I do in this thus-ordained mundane existence?

Following that vocation according to precept, forsaking your fire and possessions, directing your soul towards the Supreme Soul, indifferent in regard to the various opposites,¹ relinquishing your property, become a mendicant, eating only every other meal, subdued in soul, unwearied, grown intent on religious devotion,² withdrawn from contact with external things. Thereafter you shall attain to that religious devotion—which is the cure for connection with pain, the cause of final emancipation from existence, incomparable, unutterable, devoid of worldly attachments; through connection with that devotion you will never again have union with living beings.

My son, tell me next of yoga, or religious devotion, the cause of final emancipation from existence; by which I may escape such suffering as this, when I am again born among living beings. Since I am intent on attachments, and my soul does not by reason of the bonds of mundane existence attain to religious devotion, being itself even devoid of religious devotion,³ speak now of that religious devotion. "Be it so," exclaimed Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva and the other gods to her, and they departed, duly honouring the ascetic lady.

The Birth of Dattātreya¹

The Prajāpati Atri begot three sons by his wife Anasūyā namely Soma, Dattātreya and Dīrvasas who were incarnations of portions of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva respectively. Their offices are described. Dattātreya assembling young Munis about himself, tested their loyalty, by living immersed in a lake and by revelling in sensual pleasures.)

But while he contemplated her, a powerful wind through and above brought the change that was produced in her. The ten regions of the sky seized the white-lustred form of Brahmā, as it fell all around, in the form of Soma, characterized by passion. That mental Soma was begotten in her as the son of the Prajāpati Atri, the life and possessor of every excellence. Magnanimous Viṣṇu being pleased begot of her Dattātreya, the brāhmana, in whom goodness predominated, by production from his own body. Dattātreya was he called, he sucked Anasūyā's breast. He was Viṣṇu indeed incarnate, he was Atri's second son. He issued from his mother's womb seven days afterwards, being enraged on seeing that the haughty king of the Haihayas was near and was offending Atri.

¹Garga's speech.

Arjuna the son of Kṛta-vīrya, on succeeding to his kingdom, resolves to rule worthily. His minister Garga advises him to propitiate the Muni Dattātreyā. And narrates how, when the Daityas and Dānavas had conquered the gods, the gods by Bṛhaspati's counsel propitiated Dattātreyā, who, being an incarnation of Viṣṇu, was enjoying himself with Lakṣmī; and how, when the demons penetrated to Dattātreyā's hermitage and seized Lakṣmī, they were destroyed by Dattātreyā.

By propitiating him the thousand-eyed Indra gained his abode, which had been seized by the evil-minded Daityas, and slew the sons of Diti."

There was a very fierce contest between the gods and Dānavas. The lord of the Daityas was Jambha, and the leader of the gods was Sacī's spouse. And while they fought a heavenly year elapsed. Then the gods were woisted, the Daityas were victorious. The gods led by Vipracitti were vanquished by the Dānavas. They strove to flee, being dispirited at the victory of their enemies. Desirous of compassing the slaughter of the army of Daityas, accompanied by the Bāḥkilyas¹ and Rsis, they approached Brhaspati and took counsel.

Then compact together they spoke—'If only this jewel of womankind in the three worlds might be our prize, successful then should we all be—this is our engrossing thought. We are resolved therefore, let us all, foes of the gods, raise her up, place her in the palki, and bear her to our abode.

The Story of Kuvalayāśva

King Satrujit's son Rta-dhvaja receives into intimate friendship two Nāga princes in the guise of brāhmanas. They live with him by day, and spend the nights in Rasātala—They extol him to their father, and relate his story as follows—Rta-dhvaja sets out to succour the brāhmana Gālava against a Daitya Pātāla-ketu, with the aid of a wondrous horse named Kuvalaya

There was formerly a valorous king named Satrujit, in whose sacrifices Indra was pleased by receiving the soma juice. His son was a valiant destroyer of his foes, the peer of Brihaspati, Indra and the Aśvins in intellect, prowess and beauty

And all those young princes and the young brāhmanas and vaiśyas, and those two young Nāga princes engaged in bathing, kneading the limbs, adorned themselves with garments and perfumes, and occupied themselves with the business of kings.⁴

The king's son, residing in Gālava's pleasant hermitage, subdued every obstacle to the reciters of the Veda. "The base Dānava, infected with frenzy and arrogance, did not know the prince Kuvalayāśva who was dwelling in Gālava's hermitage. Then assuming the form of a hog, he approached to outrage the brāhmaṇa Gālava, who was busied in the evening service.

After traversing thousands of yojanas with speed the quick-paced boar fell into an open chasm in the earth. Immediately after him, the king's son also, on his horse, fell into the great chasm, which was enveloped in cross darkness.

Then the beast was lost to the sight of the king's son therein, and he saw Pātāla clearly there, but not that animal

Next he saw the city called Purandara-pura filled with hundreds of golden palaces, embellished with ramparts. Entering it, he beheld no man there in the city, and as he wandered about he next saw there a woman hastening along. He questioned her, the slender-limbed, 'Why or on whose account are you proceeding?' The noble lady replied not a word and ascended into the palace. And the king's son fastening up his horse on one side followed her indeed, being wide-eyed with amazement but fearless.

And she rose up, the noble lady, feeling an agitation in her mind. The slender one was overcome at once by bashfulness, astonishment and dejection. 'Who is this that has come? Is he a god, or a Yaksa, or a Gandharva, or a Nāga, or a Vidyadhara, or a man accomplished in virtuous deeds and love?

My husband having been killed by Sumbha, I am wandering, in fulfilment of a vow, from one place of pilgrimage to another by a divine course, ready for another world. But I have come here, my lord, through affection for her, experiencing grief, for there is in truth no difference between one's friend's body and one's own. If this lovely lady gets an approved hero for her husband, then assuredly may I engage in austerities with a mind at ease.

What you ask me, O lady skilled in holy law, who I am and why I have come, hear that, O lady bright of understanding! I tell it you from the beginning. Son of king Śatrujit, I was despatched by my father, O beautiful one! I reached Gelava's hermitage for the purpose of protecting the Muni. And while I was affording protection to the Munis who observe the holy law, there came one, disguised in hog like form, to hamper them. Pierced by me with an arrow, shaped like the half-moon, he rushed away with great speed mounted on horseback. I pursued him. Suddenly I fell as in play into a chasm, and my horse also Thus mounted on horseback, wandering alone in darkness, I met with light, and saw you lady, and when questioned, you gave me no answer whatever. And following you I entered this splendid palace. Thus I have related this truly. No Deva am I, or Dānava, nor Nāga, nor Gandharva or Kinnara. O sweet-smiling one. The Devas and the rest are all objects of veneration to me, O Kundalā. I am a man, you must not be afraid of this at any time.

Surpassing beauty indeed clothes the moon, and light clothes the sun: prosperity attends the happy man, fortitude the resolute man, and patience the great man. You indeed has assuredly slain that wicked base Dānava : how shall Surabhi, the mother of cattle, speak falsely? Therefore happy verily is this maiden and blessed with good fortune, in gaining union with you. Perform, O hero, the needful ceremony, celebrated according to rule.

The common plant is the Sanskrit alāvu, the modern kadu or lāu. It bears a large, thick, membranous or almost woody fruit, often 1-1/2 foot long, usually bottle- or dumb-bell-shaped (Hooker, vol. II p. 613, Roxb., p. 700)

And he taking fuel and kuśa grass, arrived immediately, through affection for Madālasā and through respect for Kuṇḍalā.

Verily a husband must ever cherish and protect his wife. A wife is her husband's help-meet to the complete attainment of religion, wealth and love. When both wife and husband are controlled by each other, then all the three combine, religion, wealth and love.

How without a wife does a man attain to religion or wealth or love, my lord? In her the three are set. So also without a husband a wife is powerless to fulfil religion and the other duties. This three-fold group resides in wedded life.

Men cannot perform the worship of the gods, pits and dependants and of guests, without a wife, O prince! And riches, although acquired by men, although brought to their own home, waste away without a wife, or even where a worthless wife dwells. But there is indeed no love for him without a wife—this is clearly evident. By community of the wedded pair in their duties he may attain to the three duties.

'Stand, stand!' thus exclaiming, the Dānava chiefs then rained¹ a shower of arrows and spears on the king's son. And Śatrujit's son, excelling in valour, split their weapons with a multitude of arrows, laughing as if in sport. In a moment the surface of Pātāla was covered with the swords, lances, spears and arrows, which were split by the multitudes of Rta-dhvaja's arrows.

Madālasā's death.

Pātāla-ketu's brother Tāla-ketu, in the guise of a Muni dwelling on the bank of the Yamunā, induces Kuvalayāśva to guard his hermitage, on the pretext that he had certain ceremonies to perform in the water—Disappearing within the water he goes to the palace and reports that Kuvalayāśva had died in battle with the Daityas—Madālasā dies through grief, and the king and queen utter their lamentations, and perform the prince's obsequies—Tāla-ketu then returns to the hermitage and releases the prince.

Many days afterwards the king again addressed his son, 'Mounting this horse go quickly to rescue the brāhmaṇas, and patrol the earth, morning by morning, day by day, for the brāhmaṇas' freedom from molestation must always be sought after. There are evil-behaved Dānavas in hundreds, born in wickedness; do you so act that the Munis may experience no obstacle from them.' Then the king's son did as he was directed by his father. After traversing the whole earth, the king's son did obeisance to his father's feet in the forenoon, as each day came round; and then during the rest of the day he enjoyed himself with her, the slender-waisted one.

Tāla-ketu spoke

The hero. Kuvalayāśva, while guarding the ascetics close to my hermitage, fighting with a certain wicked Daitya and striking down the brāhmaṇas foes in the conflict with all his might, was pierced in the breast with a spear by the wicked Daitya who resorted to magic. While dying he gave me this neck-ornament; and śūdra ascetics gave him to the fire in the wood. And the frightened horse which uttered distressed neighings, with tearful eye, was led off by that cruel Dānava. This beheld I, malicious, evil-doer. Whatever should forthwith be done in this matter, let it be done without delay. And take this neck-ornament as a consolation to your hearts, for we ascetics may not have anything to do with gold.

The sons spoke

Having so spoken, he left it on the ground and departed as he had come. And those people afflicted with grief, fell down, ill with fainting. Immediately, recovering consciousness all those royal handmaids, and the queens and the king lamented sorely distressed. But Madālasā seeing that his neck-ornament, and hearing that her husband was slain, quickly yielded up her dear life.

Thereon a great cry arose in the houses of the citizens, even as there was in the king's own house. And the king beholding Madālasā bereft of her husband and dead, made answer to all the people, having recovered his composure after due reflection.

You should not weep, nor I, I perceive, when one considers the fleetingness of even all relations. Why do I bewail my son? Why do I bewail my daughter-in-law? I think after due reflection, that neither should be bewailed, since events happen as they are fated.

Why should my son, who in obedience to me has met death when engaged in guarding the dvijas according to my command, be bewailed by the intelligent? Assuredly if my son has quitted his body on account of those dvijas, will not that body, to which he resorts, cause him to rise higher? And how is it possible that this high-born lady, thus faithful to her husband, should be bewailed?

For women have no deity besides a husband. For she would have to be thus bewailed by us, and her relatives, and other compassionate persons, if she were separated from her husband. But this noble lady, who on hearing of the death of her husband has immediately followed her husband, should not for this reason be bewailed by the wise.

Verily what woman in both the worlds would think her husband human, who gives her all happineses both in this world and the next? Neither should he be bewailed, nor yet this lady, nor I, nor his mother. We were all rescued by him who resigns his life for the sake of the brāhmanas.

For my high-souled son, by relinquishing his body which was half consumed, has freed himself from his debt to the brāhmanas, to me, to religion. Though losing his life in war, he did not surrender his mother's honour, the spotless fame of my family, or his own heroism.

The mother spoke

'Not such gratification did my mother or my sister get, O king! as I have felt in hearing that my son has been slain while protecting the Muni. Those who die, sighing, in great distress, afflicted with illness, while their relatives lament—their mother has brought forth children in vain. Those who, while fearlessly fighting in battle to guard cattle and dvijas, perish crushed with arrows, they indeed are really men in the world. He who turns not his back on suppliants, friends, and enemies, in him his father has a real son, and in him his mother has given birth to a hero. A woman's pain of conception reaches, I think, its success at the time when her son either vanquishes his foes or is slain in battle.

Kūvalayāśva's visit to Pātāla

Kūvalayāśva, returning home, learnt what had happened—He mourns his loss, and shunning women lives a cheerful life--The Nāga king Aśvatara, hearing this story, engages in austerities and extols Sarasvatī—Sarasvatī, propitiated by him, restores him his companion Kambala, and gives them both perfect skill in poetry and music—Both propitiate Śiva, who at their request gives Aśvatara Madālasā as his daughter, restored to life as before—At Aśvatara's suggestion, his sons invite Kūvalayāśva to their palace in Pātāla and introduce him to their father—Aśvatara asks Kūvalayāśva, to relate his story.

The king's son reaching then his own city in haste, desirous to salute his parents' feet respectfully, and eager to see Madālasā, beheld some people of the city downcast, with joyless countenances, and then again astonished with joyful faces: and other people with wide-open eyes, exclaiming "Hurrah! hurrah!" embracing one another, filled with the utmost curious interest. Long may you live O most fortunate prince! Your adversaries are slain; gladden your parents' mind and ours also, which is relieved of anxiety.

Surrounded before and behind by the citizens who were crying out thus, his joy forthwith aroused, he entered his father's palace. And his father and mother and other relations embraced him, and then invoked on him auspicious blessing's, saying "Long may you live!

Thereupon having done obeisance, surprised at what this might mean, he questioned his father; and he duly explained it to him.

On hearing that his wife Madālasā, the darling of his heart, was dead, and seeing his parents before him, he fell into the midst of a sea of shame and grief. He thought, "The maiden, on hearing I was dead, gave up life, the virtuous one: fie on me harsh-minded that I am! Malignant am I, worthless am I, that I live most pitiless, when deprived of that deer-eyed one who encountered death for my sake!"

पुनः स चिन्तयामास परिसंस्तभ्य मानसम्॥१२॥

मोहोद्गममपास्यैवं निःश्वस्योच्छ्वस्य चातुरः।

Again he thought, having firmly composed his mind, banishing hastily the rising distraction, and breathing hard outwards and inwards, feeling undone.

If I abandon life because she has died on my account, what benefit shall I confer on her? Yet this would be praiseworthy in women's opinion. Or if being downcast I weep, repeatedly exclaiming ' ah! my beloved,' still this would not be praiseworthy in us; for we are men assuredly. Frigid with grief, downcast, ungarlanded, uncleansed, I shall then become an object of contumely to my adversaries.

या मदर्थेऽत्यजत्प्राणांस्तदर्थेऽल्पमिदं मम॥

I must cut off my enemies, and obey the king, my father. And how then can I resign my life which is dependant on him? But here, I consider, I must renounce pleasure with woman, and yet that renunciation does not tend to benefit the slender-limbed one. Nevertheless in every way I must practise harmlessness, which works neither benefit nor injury. This is little for me to do on her account who resigned her life on mine.

ज्ञास्यते मत्प्रसादेन भुजगेन्द्र पर तथा।

The seven musical notes,¹ the seven modes in the musical scale,² O most noble Nāga! the seven

1 Svara, a "musical note" There are 7 svaras, viz śhḍja, riṣhabha gāndhāra madhyama, pañcama, dhaivata, and nisāda and they are designated by their initial sounds, sa, ri ga, ma pa dha, and ni but the arrangement varies, and Prof. Monier-Williams in his dictionary places nisāda first śhḍja fourth, and pañcama seventh. Those 7 svaras compose the "musical scale," grāma (Beng saptak). The interval between each consecutive pair of notes is divided into several lesser notes called sruti, thus there are 4 between sa and ri 3 between ri and ga 2 between ga and ma 4 between ma and pa, 4 between pa and dha, 3 between dha and ni and 2 between ni and sa in the higher octave—that is 22 srutis in all. The svaras correspond to the natural notes ' and the srutis to the 'sharps and flats' in European music (Raja Sourindro Mohan Tagore's Sangita sara sangraha pp 22-24, where the names of the srutis are given and his Victoria-gīti-mālā in Bengali Introduction).

2 Grāma raga I do not find this in the dictionary. Does it mean the 'series of musical scales' that can be formed by taking each of the notes (svara) as the 'key' note? Thus there would be 7 scales as there are 7 notes. But Raja S. M. Tagore calls this svara-gram (Beng) and he says that only 3 such scales were common in early times, viz, those with śhḍja gāndhāra and madhyama as key notes (Victoria gīti malā Introduction p-2) songs also,³ and the same number of modulations,⁴ so also the forty-nine musical times,⁵ and the three octaves⁶—all these you and also Kambala shall sing, O sinless one! you shall know more yet through my favour, O Nāga king

चतुर्विधं परं तालं त्रिप्रकारं लयत्रयम्॥५४॥

गतित्रयं तथा तालं मया दत्तं चतुर्विधम्।

एतद्भवान्मत्प्रसादात्पन्नगेन्द्रापरं च यत्॥५५॥

I have given you the four kinds of quaterverse,⁷ the three sorts of musical tunes,⁸ the three kinds of musical movement,⁹ also the three pauses

3 Gitaka I do not know what the seven songs are.

4 Murchana This seems to be "running up or down the scale," it is defined thus—

Kramat svaranām saptānam ārohaś cāvarohanam

Mūrchanetyucyave grama-traye tāh sapta sapta ca

As there are 7 scales obtained by taking any of the 7 notes as the key note, there would be 7 murchanās, and this applies to the 3 octaves (grāma-traya), so that there are 21 murchanās altogether (Sangita-sāra-sangraha, p 30 where their names are given). But in his Bengali Treatise Raja S. M. Tagore explains murchanā, to be the "passing uninterruptedly from one note (svara) to another, and in the process sounding all the intermediate notes and lesser notes (sruti)." This corresponds to 'slurring'. With this meaning the number of possible murchanās is almost indefinite.

5 Tala, the "division of time in music." It consists of three things, kāla, the duration of time, kriyā, the clapping of the hands (accentuation) and māna, the interval between the clappings. It seems to correspond to the 'bar' and the 'kinds of time' in European music. European music has only 3 kinds of time, Common, Triple and Compound, each with a few subdivisions. 5 but in Hindu music there is the utmost variety. I do not know what the 49 tālas here meant are, but Raja S. M. Tagore gives two lists of destālas, one enumerating 120, and the other 72.

7 Paḍa

8 Tala This seems to refer to the classification of the tālas, viz, suddha, sālan ga (or sālan ka or sāлага, v r) and sanhīma, (Raja S. M. Tagore's Sangita-sāra-sangraha, p 201), but this classification is also applied to the rāgas (see his Victoria-gīti-mālā, Introduction p, 9). The suddha are explained to be the famous kinds complete in themselves, the sālanga are those produced by a mixture of two simple ones, and the sanhīma those produced by a mixture of many simple ones.

9 Laya, "musical speed." The 3 kinds are druta, quick, madhya, mean, and vilambita, slow, the druta being twice as fast as the madhya, and the madhya twice as fast as the vilambita. Laya does not take account of prosodial time. This corresponds to "the movement" in European music.

Jaḍa spoke

Having spoken thus, the lotus-eyed goddess Sarasvatī, the tongue of all, then disappeared at once from the Nāga's view. And then, as it all happened to those two Nāgas, there was begotten in both the fullest knowledge in versification, musical time, musical notes etc.

1. Yati, "a break in the laya"(laya-pravṛtti-niyama), 'a rest' in music. The 3 kinds are samā, sroto-gatā, and go-pucchū. The samā may occur at the beginning, in the middle, or at the end of the laya, and in each of the 3 kinds of laya. The sroto-gatā occurs apparently when the time quickens (accelerando) after the rest, that is when the laya changes from vilambita to madhya, or from madhya to druta, or from vilambita or madhya to druta. The go-pucchā occurs apparently when the tune becomes slower (rallentando ritardando) after the rest, that is when the laya changes from druta to mad-hya, or from madhya to vilambita.
2. Todaya. I do not find this word in the dictionary. Does it mean 'drum-music'?"

Then the two Nāgas, observing musical time on the lute-strings, being desirous of propitiating with seven songs the lord who dwells on the peaks of Kailāsa and Himālaya, the god Śiva, who destroyed Kāma's body, both exerted themselves to the utmost, with, voice and tone combined, being assiduous morning, night, noon and the two twilights.

Śiva spoke

But when the śrāddha is reached, you should eat the middle piṇḍa by yourself, most noble Nāga, being pure, and having your mind subdued; and then, when that is eaten, the happy lady shall rise out of your middle hood, the same in form as when she died. And having pondered on this your desire, do you perform the libation to the pitṛs; immediately she, the fine-browed, the auspicious, shall rise out of you breathing middle hood, the same in form as when she died.

Having heard this, both then adored Śiva, and returned, full of contentment, to Rasātala. And so the Nāga, Kambala's younger brother, performed the śrāddha, and also duly ate the middle piṇḍa; and, while he pondered on that his desire, the slender-waisted lady was produced¹ at once, in the selfsame form, out of his breathing middle hood. And the Nāga told that to no one : he kept her, the lovely-teethed one, concealed by his women in the inner apartments.

And drawing him thence, they led the prince to Pātāla; and in Pātāla he beheld them both as young Nāgas, lustrous with the gems in their hoods, displaying the svastika marks.

The Recovery of Madālasā.

The Nāga king Aśvatara asks Kuvalayāśva what gift he can confer on him—Kualayāśva replies he needs nothing, and is sufficiently gratified by the king's favour—The king urges him and at his sons' suggestion the prince asks to see Madālasā even in illusion—The king brings her in as an illusion and afterwards restores her to Kuvalayāśva.

And herein I am successful, and my life has been rewarded, that I am a mortal have embraced your body who are divine; that the dust of your feet has found a seat on my head. When this prince's beloved wife heard that he was slain, she forsook her dear life, being deceived by a certain cruel, bad-minded Dānava, who shewed his enmity. She was the daughter of the Gandharva king, she was named Madālasā. Then he, mindful of the past, made this vow, dear father, 'No other shall be my wife save Madālasā. CHAPTER 23

Kuvalayāśva, returning home, lives in perfect happiness with Madālasā— He succeeds his father Śatrujit—A son is born to them, Vikrānta—Madālasā prattles to the infant. Two other sons are born, Subāhu and Śatru-mardana—A fourth son is born whom Madālasā names Alarka—She criticizes these names— The king objects to her way of educating them, and wishes them to be brought up as kṣatriyas—She prattles to Alarka.

Reaching then his city he narrated the whole story fully to his parents, how he had regained his slender-limbed one who had died.

And the beautiful, slender-limbed lady bowed at the feet of her father and mother-in-law, and did honour as before to her kindred with obeisance, embraces and such greetings, according to propriety, and their ages. Then the citizens held a great festival there in the city.

And Rta-dhvaja long enjoyed himself with his beautiful-waisted wife, both among mountain torrents, and on river sand-banks, and amid pleasant woods, and in groves. She also, longing to consume her merit by the delights of love enjoyed herself with him, her greatly-beloved, in pleasant places.

A long time afterwards the king Śatrujit, having ruled the earth worthily, underwent the law of Death. Then the citizens inaugurated as king his high-souled son Rta-dhvaja, noble in conduct and action.

While he duly protected his subjects as if they were his own sons, Madālasā gave birth to her first-born son. The father gave that clever child the name Vikrānta. The retainers were pleased thereat and Madālasā laughed. Madālasā spoke to her infant boy in the way of prattle, as he lay on his back crying not unmelodiously.

शुद्धोऽसि रे तात न तेऽस्ति नाम
 कृतं च ते कल्पनयाधुनैव।
 पञ्चात्मकं देहमिदं न तेऽस्ति
 नैवास्य त्वं रोदिषि कस्य हेतोः॥११॥

Perfect are you, darling, nor has your name been given you now in mere fancy. This very body of your is composed of the five elements, not indeed for this reason do you cry— wherefore then?

न वा भवानोदिति वै स्वजन्मा

शुद्धोयमासाद्य महीसमूहम्।

विकल्पमानो विविधैर्गुणार्थै-

र्गुणाञ्च भौताः सकलेन्द्रियेषु॥१२॥

Nor indeed does your highness (this title is your birth-right) cry because you are a king's son. Doubtful are the various good and bad qualities, that are connected with the elements, in all your organs.

Since in a man here the elements, extremely weak, increase by the means of the elements, namely, by means of the food and water and other nutriments given, of what has you no gain, of what has you no loss?

Do not grow infatuated at this your bodice which is already decaying, and in that your body; your body is given you by good and bad deeds; the bodice is fastened on you by persons infatuated with pride and other passions.

Do you greatly esteem each aggregate of elements— some one aggregate as a dear father, some other as a child, some other as a mother, some other as a loved wife, some other as your own property, some other as not your own. A man beguiled in mind thinks that evils tend to assuage evils, that enjoyments tend to happiness. Again the unwise man, greatly beguiled in mind, thinks that these very evils are pleasures. Laughter, gazing at the bones,¹ a pair of excessively bright mocking eyes, firm plump flesh in the breasts and elsewhere, in a woman—that is Love's abode; is not woman hell?

The carriage rests on the earth; and the body is seated in the carriage; and even in the body there is another seated, the soul. There is not the same perception of ownership in one's body, as there is this excessive infatuation with it.

Now the queen trained up that son, as he grew day by day, to unselfish thought by talking and other means. As he regularly gained strength, as he gained his father's intelligence, even so he acquired knowledge of himself through his mother's talk.

इत्थं तथा स तनयो जन्मप्रभृति बोधितः।

So the youth, instructed by her from his birth, having understanding and being unselfish, did not turn his mind towards family life.

A second son was born to her. His father named him. When he said "This is Subāhu," Madālasā laughed. Him also when a child she spoke to with prattle and other talk the same as before, and thus he, having a good intellect, acquired knowledge from his childhood.

When the king named the third-born son Śatrumardana, she the beautiful-browed laughed again very long thereat.

The slender-limbed mother similarly instructed him also from childhood. Devoid of desire he performed ceremonies, but not anything beneficial.

Now the king, when desirous of naming the fourth son, saw Madālasā, well-behaved as she was, laughing slightly: the king, somewhat eagerly curious, spoke to her as she was laughing.

The king spoke

Tell me the cause of your laughter, at the very time when the name is being given. Vikrānta, Subāhu and the other Śatru-mardana—the names given by me are I think fine, suited to the kṣatriya kindred, and indicative of heroism and majesty. If these are not good, lady—if you think this in your mind—then do you give a name to this my fourth son.

Madālasā spoke

I must obey your command, Mahārājā, as you tell me; so I will give a name to your fourth son, 'Alarka '! Learned in righteousness he shall acquire fame in the world, and this your youngest son shall have understanding." On hearing that name given the son by the mother, the king, laughing at 'Alarka ' as inappropriate, said—

The king spoke

"This name that you have given to my son, beautiful lady—why has you given such an inappropriate one? What is its meaning, O Madālasā?"

Madālasā spoke

This is my fancy, Mahārājā; I have given it as being practical. So do you listen, O king, to the meaninglessness of the names given by you. Since wise men speak of a pervading soul; and 'krānti' is described as the course which passes from one place to another place; since the soul is all-pervading in that it is ubiquitous and does not move about; therefore this appellation Vikrānta, 'passed beyond,' appears to me meaningless.

मन्ये तच्चाप्यसम्बद्धं शृणु वाप्यत्र कारणम्।

The appellation Subāhu, 'fine-armed,' given to the second son, that too is meaningless because the soul is incorporeal, O king. The name that you have given the third son, Ari-mardana, 'foe-crusher,' I think that too is inappropriate; and listen to the reason as regards it.

Since there is only one soul in all bodies, who then, O king, is regarded as its enemy in this world, or who as its friend? Creatures are crushed by creatures; how can the incorporeal be crushed? This fancy is meaningless because of the separate existence of anger and the other passions. If a bad name is fixed upon because of mutual dealing, why do you think there is no meaning in the name Alarka?¹

Being thus excellently addressed by the queen, the king, having great understanding, assented to his loved wife who spoke correctly. And the fine-browed lady spoke to that son, just as to the elder sons, what would arouse the intellect. The king said to her. "Why do you deal thus, O foolish one, with the temperament of my child, by giving him a mischievous education as you did before to my other sons.

If you should do what pleases me, if my word should be accepted, then restrain this son within the path of activity. So the path of action will not lead to utter destruction, O lady; and so the piṇḍa offering to the piṭṛs will not cease, O virtuous one. The piṭṛs dwell in the Deva-loka, they are also born as brutes, they become men likewise, and they reside within the class of elements. By offering the piṇḍa and water a man, busied in the ceremonies, ever nourishes them, O fine-browed one, both the righteous and the unrighteous, those worn out with hunger, those harassed by thirst: he nourishes the gods likewise and guests.

whole duty of kṣatriyas, as regards this life and life in the next world.

My child, a king inaugurated in his kingdom must in the first place conciliate his subjects, without obstructing his own duty. Eschewing the seven vices, which are radically injurious, he must guard himself from his adversaries without departing from good counsel Just as a man meets destruction in eight ways from a fine-wheeled chariot, so undoubtedly does even a king without departing from good counsel And let him recognise the bad and good ministers through his enemies' faults, and he must strenuously trace out his enemy's, spies by spies

But a king must not confide in friends, acquaintances, or relatives, let a king trust even in an unfriendly person, if so obliged by his affairs A king must himself be conversant with the stationary, prosperous and deteriorating conditions of state policy, be familiar with the merits of the six measures of military policy,¹ and not be enslaved by desire citizens, then let him, fight against his enemies But he who, without having indeed conquered these, desires to conquer his adversaries, he, with his own self unsubdued and with unsubdued ministers,² is killed by his enemies' party A king must therefore, my son, first conquer desire and the other passions, for when they are conquered, victory is his assuredly, vanquished by them, a king perishes Desire, and anger, and covetousness, intoxication and pride, joy also, and enemies these in truth tend to destroy kings Let him restrain himself, recollecting how Pāndu himself was killed when engrossed in love and how Anuhrāda³ killed his own son through anger, and how Aila⁴ was killed through covetousness, how Vena⁵ was killed by dvijas through intoxication how Anāyus⁶ son Bali was killed through pride, Purañjaya through joy Recollecting how, when these were conquered, high-souled Marutta vanquished all, let a king cast out these his own faults

A king, who possesses the natural character of the moon and the sun, ought to know for the sake of good policy the behaviour of sparks of fire and of the seeds of the seemul tree.¹ And a king ought to gather wisdom from a courtesan, the lotus flower,² and a grasshopper, a doe-hare, and the breast of pregnant women, and also from a woman of the cow-herd caste. In this way, a king should drive his politics on the basis of negotiations, gifting, punishment and secrecy and should use his intelligence like a woman of lower caste (cāṇḍāla woman).

A king should assume the five forms of Indra, the Sun, Yama and the Moon, and also of the Wind in the work of government. Just as Indra nourishes the people on the earth with showers of water for four months, so should a king nourish them with largesses.

Just as the Sun draws up the water with his rays for eight months, so should a king collect the tolls and other dues by truly subtle means. Just as Yama restrains friend and foe when the time arrives, so a king should be impartial towards friend and foe, towards the vicious and the virtuous.

Just as by gazing on the full Moon, a man grows affectionate, so, where the people are all peaceful, that is the practice he should adopt from the moon. Just as the Wind moves mysterious among all creatures, so should a king more among the citizens, ministers and others, and among his relatives by the agency of spies.

The king, my child, goes to Svarga, whose mind is attracted neither by covetousness, nor by love, nor by riches, as by other motives. The king goes to Svarga, who keeps within their duty erring foolish men, who are swerving from their duty. He, in whose kingdom the duties of the four classes and the four periods of a brāhmana's life do not fall into desuetude, has, my child, eternal happiness after death and in a future state. A king's highest duty, and that which brings supreme felicity for him, is the maintenance among men of their own laws,³ since it is disturbed by evil-minded men. By protecting creatures indeed a king reaches success; he who duly protects gains by his efforts a portion of righteousness.

The king, who protects the people of the four casts, gains happiness like Indra.⁴

Madālasā spoke

A brāhmaṇa's duty is held to be threefold— liberality, study, sacrifice. There is no other fourth duty. His duty is regardless of his position. Irreproachable sacrificial and educational occupations, and the acceptance of gifts from the purified—this is fitly proclaimed his threefold means of livelihood liberality, study, sacrifice— this is declared to be the threefold duty of a kṣatriya also: protection of the earth, and subsistence by weapons are his means of livelihood. Liberality, study, sacrifice— that indeed is the threefold duty of, a vaiśya also: merchandise, and the tending of cattle, and agriculture are his means of livelihood. Liberality and sacrifice, obedience to dvijas, I have declared to be the threefold duty of the śūdra also; and his means of livelihood are a handicraft, obedience likewise to dvijas, nourishing them, buying and selling. These are said to be the duties of the four classes. Hear also the connexions among the four periods of a brāhmaṇa's life.

यावत्तु नोपनयनं क्रियते वै द्विजन्मनः।

कामचेष्टोक्तिभक्षस्तु तावद्धवति पुत्रक॥ १०॥

A man who has not erred from the duty of his own class gains perfect felicity: he goes to hell after death, if he has served what is forbidden. And as long indeed as a dvija is not invested with the sacred thread, so long, my son, he acts, speaks and eats unrestrainedly.

कृतोपनयनः सम्यग्ब्रह्मचारी गुरोर्गृहे।

स्वाध्यायोऽथाग्निशुश्रूषा स्नानं भिक्षाटनं तथा।

गुरोर्निवेद्य तच्चाद्यमनुज्ञातेन सर्वदा॥ १२॥

When duly invested with the sacred thread, he becomes a brahmacārin in his guru's house, and he should dwell there. I relate his duty; hear it of me. Private study, attendance on fire, bathing, and wandering about for alms, and always eating that food after informing his guru and obtaining permission from him.

एक द्वौ सकलान्वापि वेदान्प्राप्य गुरोर्मुखात्।
अनुज्ञातो वरा दत्त्वा दक्षिणा गुरो ततः॥ १४॥

He should be diligent in the guru's business, there should be thorough evoking of his affection, and when summoned by him, he should read intently, his mind withdrawn from everything else. After acquiring one, two or all the Vedas from his guru's mouth, he is authorized to give the guru his fee with words of eulogy.

But let him enter on the grhastha period when desirous of the period of family life, or, by his own wish, on the vāna-prastha period and on the fourth period. Or let the dvija await his decease there in the guru's house, obedient to the guru's son if the guru be dead, or to the guru's disciple, if there be no son. Obedient, free from self-conceit, let him pass through the period of a brahmachārin.

Next when he has desisted therefrom, through desire for a grhastha's status, let him then rightly marry a wife, sprung from the family of a different¹ Rsi, his equal, free from sickness, not deformed, for the sake of a grhastha's status. And having gained money by his own toil, let him duly please the pitrs gods and guests by faith, and also nourish those who resort to him, his dependants and children, and his female relatives, and the afflicted, the blind, and the outcast, the birds and the cattle,² to the utmost of his power with gifts of food.

पितृदेवातिथिज्ञातिभुक्तशेष स्वयं नरः।
भुञ्जीत च सम भृत्यैर्यथाविभवमात्मनः॥ २२॥

This is the duty of a grhastha, sexual intercourse also at the proper season but he should not, to the utmost of his power, neglect the performance of the five sacrifices. And let the man himself, being zealous to the best of his power, together with his dependants, eat the remains of the food consumed by the pitrs, the gods, the guests and paternal kinsmen.

Now I have declared this grhastha period distinctly. I describe to you the duty of the vāna-prastha. Be it heard. Having seen the succession of his offspring, and the stoop of his body, let the wise man enter upon the vāna-prastha period, for the purpose of purifying his soul. In it there is the enjoyment of the forest, and attraction by penances, sleeping on the ground, sacred study, ceremonies for the pitrs gods and guests, the homa oblation, the three daily ablutions,³ the wearing matted hair and a bark dress, and diligence in meditation unceasingly, the use of forest unguents.

But hear from me the nature of the fourth period, which with its peculiar duties has been described, my darling, by high-souled men conversant with its duties.¹ Renunciation of every association, sacred study, abstinence from anger, control over the senses, no long dwelling in one habitation, abstaining from undertakings, and eating food obtained by begging once a day, also desire for the awakening of knowledge of the soul, and gazing at the soul

एते सक्षेपतः प्रोक्ता धर्मवर्णाश्रमेषु च।

Now I have acquainted you with this duty in the fourth period. "Hear from me the common duty of the other classes and of the periods of life: Truthfulness, purity and harmlessness, freedom from envy, and patience, mercy, generosity,² and contentment is the eighth virtue

These duties have been succinctly described to you concerning the classes and the periods of life and a man should stand wholly within these his own peculiar duties. And the man, who, overstepping his own duty named according to his own class or period of life, should behave otherwise, should be punished by the king. And the king who over-looks men, who after forsaking their own duties commit sin, loses his pious acts. Therefore a king must vigorously punish all the classes that behave contrary to their special duties, and he must keep them within their own occupations

Therefore, my son, a man must nourish the gods, ṛṣis, and pitṛs and men and living things daily, even as his own body. Therefore having bathed and become clean he should, composed in mind, delight the gods, ṛsis and pitṛs, and the prajāpati also with, water at the proper time. And a man having worshipped the gods with the fragrant flowers of the great-flowered jasmine, should next delight Agni; and the bali offering should also be made.

Let him cast the bali offering to Brahmā and the Viśvadevas inside the house, and to Dhanvantari to the northeast; let him offer the bali eastward to Indra, southwards to Yama, and the bali westwards to Varuṇa, and northwards to Soma.

And let him also give the bali to Dhātri and Vidhātri at the house-door, and let him give it to Aryaman outside and all around the houses. Let him offer the bali to night-walking goblins in the air, and let him scatter it to the pitṛs, standing with his face southward. Then the gr̥hastha, being intent and having his mind well composed, should take the water and cast it, as a wise man, into those places for those several deities, that they may rinse out their mouths.

Having thus performed in his house the family-bali, the pure gr̥hastha should perform the utsarga oblation respectfully for the nourishment of living things. And let him scatter it on the ground both for the dogs, and low-caste men and the birds; for certainly this offering to the Viśvadevas is declared to be one for evening and morning.

And then he, as a wise man, having rinsed out his mouth, should look towards the door the eighth part of a muhūrta, whether a guest is to be seen. He should honour the guest, who has arrived there, with rice and other food and with water and with fragrant flowers and other presents, according to his power.

He should not treat as a guest a friend, nor a fellow-villager, nor one who bears the name of an unknown family, nor one who has arrived at that time. Men call a brāhmaṇa who has arrived, hungry, wearied, supplicating, indigent, a guest; he should be honoured by the wise according to their power.

A learned man should not inquire his lineage or conduct, nor his private study; he should esteem him, whether handsome or unhandsome in appearance, as a prajāpati. For since he stays but a transitory time, he is therefore called an atithi, 'a guest.' When he is satisfied, the gr̥hastha is released from the debt which arises from hospitality. The guilty man, who without giving to the guest himself eats, he incurs only sin and feeds on ordure in another life.

The guest transferring his misdeeds to that man, from whose house he turns back with broken hopes, and taking that man's merit, goes off. Moreover a man should honour a guest respectfully according to his power with gifts of water and vegetables, or with just what he is himself eating.

And he should daily perform the śrāddha with rice and other food and with water with regard to the pitṛs and brāhmaṇas; or he should feed a brāhmaṇa. Taking up an agra¹ of the rice, he should present it to a brāhmaṇa: and he should give an alms to wandering brāhmaṇas who ask. The alms should be the size of a mouthful, the agra four mouthfuls. Brāhmaṇas call the agra four times a hantakāra.² But without giving food, or a hantakāra, an agra or an alms, according to his substance, he must not himself eat. And he should eat, after he has done reverence to guests, friends, paternal kinsmen, relatives, and petitioners, the maimed, and children and old men and the sick.

If a man consumed with hunger, or another who is destitute wants food, he should be fed by a householder who has adequate³ substance. Whatever kinsman is dispirited when he reaches a prosperous kinsman, the latter gets the sin that has been done by the dispirited man. And the precept must be observed at evening, and he should do reverence to the guest who has arrived there after sunset, accordingly to his ability, with a bed, a seat and food.

Thus a weight is placed on the shoulder of one who undertakes family life. Vidhātri, and the gods, and the pitṛs, the great Ṛṣis, all shower bliss on him, and so also do guests and relatives: and the herds of cattle and the flocks of birds, and the minute insects that exist besides, are satisfied. And Atri himself used to sing songs on this subject, noble one! Hear those, O noble one! that appertain to the gr̥hastha period—

Madālasā explains to Alarka the ceremonies to be performed by a grhastha, which are of three kinds continual, occasional and periodical—She explains the occasional śrāddha, which is celebrated for men and women

मदालसोवाच

नित्य नैमित्तिक चैव नित्यनैमित्तिक तथा।

गृहस्थस्य त्रिधा कर्म तन्निशामय पुत्रकम् ॥ १ ॥

Madālasā spoke

Now what the grhastha's ceremonies are, the continual, and the occasional, and the periodical, listen thereto, my son!

पञ्चयज्ञाश्रित नित्य यदेतत्कथितं तव।

नित्यनैमित्तिकं ज्ञेयं पर्वश्राद्धादिपण्डितैः।

तत्र नैमित्तिकं वक्ष्ये श्राद्धमाभ्युदयं तव ॥ ३ ॥

The continual are comprised in the five sacrifices,¹ these that I have described to you and the occasional are the others, such as the ceremony on the birth of a son, and so forth The periodical² are recognisable by the learned as the sacrifices at the moon's changes, the śrāddha and others

Here³ I will tell you of the occasional śrāddha celebration, of the birth-ceremony that should be performed similarly by men or the birth of a son, and everything duly related in order that should be done at marriages and on other occasions And in this the Nāndī-mukha pitrs⁴ must be worshipped, and he should give the pindas mixed with curds and containing barley, facing northward or eastward, with composed mund making the oblation Some men like it with the offering to the Viśvadevas omitted

युग्माश्चात्र द्विजाः कार्यास्ते पूज्याश्च प्रदक्षिणम्।

एतं नैमित्तिकं वृद्धौ तथान्यच्चोर्ध्वदैहिकम् ॥ ७ ॥

And in this ceremony the dvijas must be arranged in pairs, and must be worshipped in dextral circumambulation This is the occasional ceremony during growth, and the other is the funeral obsequies

And the śrāddha for a single deceased person should be performed on the day of the death, listen to that And it should be performed omitting the offering to the gods, and with a single vessel And the oblations with-fire⁵ should not be made in the fire without the ceremonies And he should give one pinda to the deceased person near the fragments of food, and sesamum-seed and water on the right, accompanying them with the recollection of that person's name ' May he be exempt from decay,' let the celebrant say, and 'may enjoyment be his,' let the others delighted say, at the place where the brāhmanas are dismissed Men must do this every month for a year

Now at the expiration of the year, or whenever the ceremony is performed by men, the śrāddha for deceased sapindas must be performed for him also so the rule is stated, and that must be without the offering to the gods, and accompanied with a single argha offering in a single vessel And that ceremony must not be performed there in the fire without offering the oblations-with-fire and on the right there, he should feed the single dvijas

And there is another distinction, consisting in an extra ceremony every month, do you listen attentive to me, as I tell you of it, while it is being described He should fill four vessels there with, sesamum-seed, perfume and water, three for the pitrs one for the deceased person, my son And he should scatter the arghya-oblation in the three vessels, and in the deceased's vessel,¹ uttering the words 'ये समाना इति', he should perform the rest as before

This śrāddha for a single deceased person is ordained precisely the same for women also The śrāddha for deceased sapindas does not exist for them, if they have no son The śrāddha for a single deceased person must be performed every year for a woman by the men, duly on the day of her death, as has been here mentioned for men

But if there are no sons, the sapindas, if they are wanting, the sahodakas,² and those who may be the mother's sapindas and those who may be the mother's sahodakas, should duly perform this ceremony for a man who has no son, and for one who has begotten only a daughter The daughters and their children should in this way perform the ceremony for the maternal grandfather But those who are designated as the sons of two such, persons should worship their maternal and paternal grandfathers fittingly with the occasional śrāddhas

When all these relatives are wanting, the women, should perform the ceremony without the mantas for their husbands, when they too are wanting, the king should cause the ceremony to be performed by a member of his own family, and the cremation and all the other ceremonies to be performed properly by men of that caste, for the Description of the Pārvaṇa Śrāddha.

Madālasā mentions the seven sapinḍa ancestors, and the lepa-bhujas, and the remoter ancestors—She explains how the celebrant of the śrāddha nourishes them all—She enumerates the times for the śrāddha, and the persons who should and who should not be invited to it—She describes how the śrāddha should be performed.

मदालसोवाच

तेषामन्यश्चतुर्थो यः पुत्र लेपभुजान्भुक्।

Madālasā spoke

After the performance of the śrāddha to deceased sapinḍas, he who is the father's great-grandfather passes to the class of those who feed on the lepa,¹ having lost his share in the pinḍa offered to the pitṛs. He, who is the fourth there-above among those who feed on the lepa bestowed by the deceased's son, ceases to eat thereof and obtains the satisfaction that is freed from the relationship.

पिता पितामहश्चैव तथैव प्रपितामहः।

इत्येष मुनिभिः प्रोक्तः सम्बन्धः साप्तपौरुषः।

यजमानात्प्रभृत्यूर्ध्वमनुलेपभुजस्तथा॥ ५॥

The father, and grandfather, and also the great-grandfather—these truly must be known as the three males who are related by the pinḍa.² And those who are related by the lepa are said to be the three others reckoning upwards from the grandfather's grandfather: and the celebrant is the seventh among them. Such have Munis declared this seven-ancestral relationship to be, reckoning from the celebrant upwards. And there-above are those beyond participation in the lepa.

ततोऽन्ये पूर्वजाः स्वर्गे ये चान्ये नरकौकसः।

ये च तिर्यक्त्वमापन्ना ये च भूतादिसंस्थिताः॥ ६॥

Next are classed all the other ancestors, both those who dwell in Naraka, and those who have become animals, and those who reside within living creatures and other things.

तान्सर्वान्यजमानो वै श्राद्धं कुर्वन्त्यथाविधि।

समाप्याययते वत्स येन येन शृणुष्व तत्॥ ७॥

By what several means the celebrant, while performing the śrāddha rightly, nourishes all those ancestors, hear that, my child.

अन्नप्रकिरणं यत्तु मनुष्यैः क्रियते भुवि।

तेन तृप्तिमुपायान्ति ये पिशाचत्वमागताः॥ ८॥

यास्तुगान्नाम्बुकणिकाः पतन्ति धरणीतले।

ताभिराप्यायनं तेषां ये देवत्वं कुले गताः॥ १०॥

Now truly those ancestors who have become piśācas obtain satisfaction from the food that men scatter on the ground. Those ancestors, my son,

1. The wipings of the hands after offering the funeral oblations to the three sapinḍas.

2. Sapinḍas

who have become trees, receive satisfaction from the water that drips from the bathing garment on the ground. But the drops of water, that fall from the limbs on the ground, minister nourishment to those ancestors in the family who have attained divinity.

उद्धृतेष्वथ पिण्डेषु याश्चान्नकणिका भुवि।

ताभिराप्यायनं तेषां ये तिर्यक्त्वं कुले गताः॥ ११॥

ये वा दग्धाः कुले बालाः क्रियायोग्या ह्यसंस्कृताः।

ब्राह्मणानां तथैवान्ये तेन तृप्तिं प्रयान्ति वै॥ १३॥

एवं यो यजमानस्य यश्च तेषां द्विजन्मनाम्॥ १४॥

And when the piṇḍas are taken up, the particles of food that fall on the earth—those ancestors in the family who have become animals gain nourishment therefrom. The children moreover in the family who, being capable of performing religious ceremonies but not having undergone the purificatory rites, are burnt on their death, they in their distress subsist on the scattering of the food and the water used in scouring. And the water, both that which is used by brāhmaṇas for rinsing out the mouth after meals, and that which is used by them for sprinkling the feet—the other ancestors likewise gain satisfaction indeed therefrom.

कश्चिज्जलान्नविक्षेपः शुचिरुच्छिष्ट एव वा।

तेन तेन कुले तत्र तत्तद्योन्यन्तरं गताः॥ १५॥

प्रयान्त्याप्यायनं वत्स सम्यक्छाद्दक्रियावताम्।

अन्यायोपाजितैरर्थैर्यच्छ्राद्धं क्रियते नरैः॥ १६॥

तृप्यन्ते तेन चाण्डालपुल्कसाद्यासु योनिषु।

So whatever water and food is scattered by the celebrant and by those dvijas, whether it be unsullied or fragmentary, that, my child, in the family of those who duly perform the śrāddhas, nourishes the other ancestors who have been born among the several creations. With the śrāddhas, which men perform with ill-gotten wealth, are satisfied those ancestors who, have been born as cāṇḍalas, pulkāsas and other men of degraded castes.

एवामाप्यायनं वत्स बहूनामपि बान्धवैः॥ १७॥

तस्माच्छ्राद्धं नरो भक्त्या शाकैरपि यथाविधि॥ १८॥

कुर्वीत कुर्वतः श्राद्धं कुले कश्चिन्न सीदति।

Thus many here derive nourishment, my child, through their relations who perform the śrāddhas, by means of the casting away of food and drops of water. Therefore a man should perform the śrāddha in faith according to rule even with vegetables: no one perishes in the family of one who performs the śrāddha.

woman, one who discards the Vedas, and one who abandons the sacred fire, a man who has been corrupted by the husband of a low caste woman,³ and others who habitually practise improper acts, — all these persons are verily to be shunned in ceremonies to the pitṛs, (O brāhmaṇas.)

And both he, who shall perform a śrāddha that ought to be performed by those self-controlling men, and he, who indulges in sexual intercourse after having offered the śrāddha and eaten the food— the ancestors of these two men verily lie down in that semen a month. Moreover he who eats at a śrāddha and he who goes to a śrāddha after intercourse with a woman— the ancestors of those two men feed on semen and urine for that month. Therefore a wise man must first issue an invitation; and men who have intercourse with women before the day arrives must be shunned.

control themselves at the proper times, after first propitiating them with prostrations and other reverential acts. Just as the time of the waning moon is dearer to the pitrs than that of the waxing moon, so the afternoon pleases the pitrs more than the forenoon. One should do reverence to these dvijas, who have arrived at his house, with a welcome, and with the pavitra in hand he should seat those, who have rinsed out their mouths, on seats.

In the case of the pitrs the number of brāhmanas should be uneven, and in the case of the Gods¹ even, or, according to the circumstances of the celebrant, there should be one brāhmana for the pitrs and one for the Gods. In like manner for the maternal ancestors the number of brāhmanas should be uneven or only one. The brāhmanas intended for the Viśvadevas may be identical on the side of the pitrs and maternal ancestors, but some other men desire that they should be distinct. He should place the brāhmanas intended for the Gods with their faces toward the east, and those for the pitrs toward the north.²

The ceremony due to the maternal ancestors has been similarly expounded by the wise. Let the intelligent man giving kuśa grass for a seat, and worshipping with the arghya and other offerings, giving things pure and such like, and obtaining permission from them—let the wise dvija perform the invocation to the gods according to the mantras

And having also given the arghya offering to all the deities with barley and water, and having duly given perfume, garlands, water and incense accompanied with a lamp, let him both perform the whole of the dextral circumambulation for the pitrs, and having given a double quantity of darbha grass, and having obtained permission from them, let the intelligent man perform the invocation to the pitrs, prefacing it with the mantras. And let him also perform the dextral circumambulation and give the arghya offering and barley and sesamum seed, intent on pleasing the pitrs.

Then permitted by the dvijas who say, 'Perform the ceremonies in the fire!' let him offer rice unmixed with condiments or salt according to rule. The first rite consists in uttering 'Svāhā' to fire, the bearer of oblations to the pitrs, and let the next be 'Svāhā' to Soma who is esteemed by the pitrs, and the third offering is 'Svāhā' to Yama, the lord of the departed. And let him put the remains of the offering into the vessels of the dvijas, and taking hold of the vessels let him give the rice according to rule.

He should say affably 'Ho, do you enjoy yourselves happily!' and then they also should eat happily, with their minds attentive thereon and observing silence. And a man should leisurely give them whatever food they like best, displaying no wrath and alluring them appropriately. And let him utter the mantras which vanquish the Rākṣasas, and let him strew the ground with sesamum seed and with white mustard; for the śrāddha possesses abundant devices for protection.

Then, my son, let him with his left hand put the piṇḍas with rice and sesamum-seed on the darbha grass, near the remains of the food, for the piṭṛs. Let him composedly also give them water with the part of the hand¹ sacred to the piṭṛs, since O prince! He celebrates the sacrifice with faith for the piṭṛs.

Similarly he should, after giving the piṇḍas on behalf of the maternal grandfathers according to rule, then give water for rinsing out the mouth together with scent, garlands etc. and having given the brāhmanas' fee according to his ability, address them "May Svadhā be fortunate!" and let him cause them, who being satisfied say "Be it so!" to pronounce the Vaiśvadevika mantras. Let him say "May they be pleased!" "Hail to you, O Viśvedevas." And on those brāhmanas, saying, "Be it so!" he should request their benedictions. He should dismiss them, addressing them pleasantly and prostrating himself in faith; and he should attend them as far as the door, and he should return, a gladdened man.

Then he should perform the continual ceremony, and should also feed guests. And some very good men wish for a continual ceremony to the piṭṛs, and others do not wish it for the piṭṛs. He should perform the remainder as the first part: some think 'not with a separate cooking vessel,' some prefer it repeated exactly in the same order.² Then the celebrant should eat that rice in company with his servants and others.

Thus should the man skilled in religious law perform composedly the śrāddha to the piṭṛs, or so as satisfaction accrues to the brāhmaṇas. There are three pure things in a śrāddha, sesamum-seed,¹ sacrificial grass, and the sesamum-plant;² and they say these, (O princely brāhmaṇa) are to be avoided, anger, journeying, haste, A silver vessel is also commended at śrāddhas, my son. Now silver is for use, for looking at and for giving away; for when the offering to the piṭṛs is milked out in a silver vessel, the piṭṛs give car to the earth;³ hence the piṭṛs desire silver, which increases their affection.

The ordinance of the Śrāddha.

Madālasā explains what kinds of food please the piṭṛs at śrāddhas and for what periods—what kinds are to be avoided—what sites should be avoided for the ceremony—what men and animals should be excluded—and what defilements must be avoided—Yogīs must have priority at the śrāddha—ancient songs are to be sung—and what benefits accrue from the performance.

The piṭṛs are satisfied with clarified butter and rice for a month. The paternal grandfathers receive satisfaction with fish-meat for two months. Venison should be known to satisfy the piṭṛs for three months; and the flesh of hares nourishes the piṭṛs for four months; birds' flesh satisfies them for five months; hog's flesh for six months; goat's flesh for seven months; and flesh of the black antelope⁵ for eight months; flesh of the ruru deer gives them satisfaction for nine months, without doubt; flesh of the gayal⁶ gives them satisfaction for ten months.

Hence let a man offer the ceremony being well secluded, and scattering the ground with sesamum seed. Thus may safety be secured in the śrāddha even for both, my child.

Let him duly offer the śrāddha on the thirteenth day and when the moon is in the asterism Maghā, and milk mixed with honey and clarified butter during the winter half of the year. Let a man therefore, my son, worship his own pitṛs in faith, hoping to gain all his wishes and his own deliverance from evil. Men's pitṛs, when delighted with śrāddhas, please the Vasus, the Rudras and the Ādityas, the constellations, the planets and the stars. The pitṛs, when delighted with śrāddhas, bestow long life, wisdom, wealth, knowledge, Svarga, final emancipation from existence, and joys and sovereignty.

The benefits to be obtained from the Voluntary Śrāddhas.

Madālasā explains the benefits to be obtained from performing the śrāddha voluntarily with a view to the benefits—on the various days of the lunar fortnight—and when the moon is in the different asterisms.

Madālasā spoke

The first day of the lunar fortnight, if the śrāddha be performed on it, is auspicious for the acquisition of wealth; the second bestows men; and the third seeks for boons; the fourth, destroys enemies; in the fifth a man acquires fortune; in the sixth he may become worthy of worship : in the seventh he acquires chieftainship; in the eighth the highest prosperity; in the ninth he gains women; in the tenth perfect gratification of his wishes. So let him, assiduous in the ceremonies, gain all the Vedas in the eleventh.

And in the twelfth the worshipper of the pitrs gains continual victories, offspring, mental vigour, cattle, prosperity, independence and perfect nourishment. The man of intense faith, who performs the śrāddha on the thirteenth day, gains length of life and sovereignty undoubtedly. Since one is successful in śrāddhas by means of choice food, he, whose ancestors died or were slain with weapons in their youth, should, if he wishes for their pleasure, perform the ceremony on the fourteenth day. The pure man, who performs the śrāddha diligently on the night of the new moon, obtains all his wishes and attains Svarga everlastingly.

By worshipping the pitrs when the moon is in the asterism Kṛttikā, a man obtains Svarga. A man who wishes for offspring may obtain it when the moon is in the asterism Rohiṇī; and he may gain vigour when she is in the Saumya signs of the Zodiac;¹ and he may obtain valour when she is in the asterism Ārdrā; and lands and other possessions when she is in Punarvasu; and nourishment by always worshipping when she is in Puṣya; and noble sons when she is in Aśleṣā; and pre-eminence among his relations when she is in Maghā; and good fortune when she is in Phalgunī.² And the man of liberal disposition obtains offspring when she is in Uttarā Phalgunī.

A man who offers śrāddhas when she is in Hasta verily attains excellence. And so a man of goodly form may obtain offspring when she is in Citrā. Svāti bestows success in trade; Viśākhā gives philoprogenitiveness. Men who perform the śrāddha when the moon is in Anurādhā attain imperial rule; and when she is in Jyēsthā lordship; and when she is Mūla perfect health.

Acquisition of fame comes from performing the śrāddha when she is in Āṣāḍha; and freedom from grief in Uttarā Āṣāḍha. And one gains bright worlds by performing it when she is in Śravaṇa; and immense wealth when she is in Dhaniṣṭhā. One may acquire intimate knowledge of the Vedas when she is in Abhijit; and success in medicine when she is in Śatabhishaj; goats and sheep by performing the ceremony in Bhādra; and amorous dalliance in the latter part of Bhādra, And one who performs the śrāddha when she is in Revatī acquires the baser metals; and when she is in Aśvini horses; and when she is in Bharanī full length of life. Hence a man who is skilled in true knowledge should perform the voluntary śrāddhas at these seasons.

Alarka's Education —The exposition of Virtuous Custom¹

Madālāsā mentions the benefits of the observance of Virtuous Custom— which consists in the pursuit of righteousness, wealth and love—She mentions a large number of general rules regarding religious worship, eating, social behaviour, private actions, and marriage—She gives general rules regarding the sacrifices, and describes the portions of the hand to be used therein—and mentions how one's residence should be chosen.

He incurs sin if he neglects the periodic ceremonies."

Alarka spoke

You has declared to me, mother, the threefold ceremonies to be observed by men, the perpetual, the occasional, and the periodic.² I wish to hear, O lady who gladden your family, about Virtuous custom by practising which a man gains happiness in the next world and in this.

Madālasā spoke

A householder must ever maintain Virtuous custom thoroughly : for one who has lost Virtuous custom has no happiness here or in the next world. Sacrifice, alms-giving and austerities do not tend to the welfare of a man here, who habitually transgresses Virtuous Custom. For a man who follows bad custom does not find long life here. One must earnestly follow Virtuous custom; Virtuous custom destroys what is inauspicious.

तस्य स्वरूपं वक्ष्यामि सदाचारस्य पुत्रक।

I will expound to you my son, the nature of that virtuous custom. Hear it from me with single mind, and even so maintain it.

A householder who performs the domestic sacrifices must strive to accomplish the three-fold objects of life:³ in full success therein lies the householder's own success here and in the next world. With a quarter of his Wealth let him, master of himself, lay up a store for the next world; and with half let him support himself and perform the periodic śrāddhas; and treating a quarter as his capital, he should increase it, by exerting himself on his own account. Thus, my son, Wealth ought to be fruitful according to Virtuous Custom.

द्विधा कामो निगदितस्त्रिवर्गोऽस्याविरोधतः॥ १४॥

परस्परानुबन्धांश्च सवनितान्विचिन्तयेत्।

Similarly a wise man must practise Righteousness in order to withstand sin; and so also the third, Love, yields fruit here indeed on account of the next world. And the third, Love, is not impeded through fear of diminution. Love also is said to be two-fold from its not being opposed by this three-fold class. Let a man consider all these successive correlations.

विपरीतानुबन्धांश्च धर्मादींस्ताञ्छृणुष्व मे॥ १५॥

उभाभ्यां च द्विधा कामस्तेन तौ च द्विधा पुनः॥ १६॥

Hear from me those opposite correlations, such as Righteousness. Righteousness aims at a succession of righteousness.¹ Righteousness is not destructive to one's own Wealth. And Love is diverse from both; and those two again are diverse from it.

At the Brāhma moment a man should think of and ponder over Righteousness and Wealth, after rising up and rinsing out his mouth, standing towards the east, self-restrained, pure : let him worship the twilight with the constellations in the east, the twilight with the sun in the west, as is right : he should not neglect it even when free from adversity.

While he has remains of food in his mouth, he should not carry on any conversation and he should cease his reading and he should not touch a cow, a brāhmaṇa, fire or his own head : "Nor should he look at the sun or the moon or the constellations with passionate desire. Let him perform the worship of the gods and the ceremonies to fire and the respectful salutation to his guru and also the ceremony of eating his food, after duly rinsing out his mouth. Facing eastwards or northwards he should reverently rinse out his mouth, my son, with frothless, inodorous, pure and holy water. He should avoid the five earth's from beneath water, from a habitation, from an ant-hill, from ground infested with mice and where purificatory actions etc., have been carried on. After washing his hands and feet and sprinkling water on them he should, with his face between his knees, and composed mind, rinse out his mouth. He should drink water three or four times after twice wiping the sides of his mouth, the apertures of the body, and his head. After duly rinsing out his mouth with water, being pure, he should perform the ceremony to the gods, the ṛsis and the pitrs diligently. A man should always perform the ceremonies, preserving a composed mind.

A wise man should rinse out his mouth, after he has sneezed, or spitten out, or donned his raiment. After a sneeze, and licking and a vomit and spitting etc., he should rinse out his mouth, touch a cow's back and look at the sun; and he should hold up his right ear, since this is in his power; in the absence of the former, he should do the latter; if the former be wanting, it is desirable to do the latter. He should not gnash his teeth, nor beat his own body.

He should marry one who is in the seventh or fifth degree distant from his parents : he should guard his wife and he should shun jealousy, by day, in sleep and in sexual intercourse.

He should avoid just the fifth night of the moon in order to avoid the birth of females; then let him approach his wife on the sixth night, that night is the best among the even nights, my sons. Sons are begotten on the even nights, daughters on the odd nights : therefore a wise man who wishes for a son should always cohabit with his wife on the even nights.

One should do reverence, my son, to dvijas, who have dwell for a year, with an offering of honey and milk according to one's ability and with alacrity at fitting times. And the brāhmaṇa who desires bliss should observe their governance, and if intelligent he should not contradict them even though always scolded by them.

Then having offered to Anumati¹ he should next offer the household bali and the constant oblations, that I have already explained to you, according to the ritual.

He should perform the ceremonies to the gods and other objects of worship, with each one's special portion of the hand according to rule; and he should perform the ceremony of rinsing out the mouth with the portion of the hand sacred to Brahmā. This is called the portion of the hand sacred to Brāhma for the purpose of rinsing out the mouth, viz., a line drawn to the left of the thumb of the right hand.

And the gods' portion of the hand is at the tips of the fingers; the ritual of ceremonies to the gods should be performed therewith. The prajāpati's portion of the hand is at the root of the little finger, his ceremony must be performed³ therewith.

It is proper always to rinse out the mouth with the portion of the hand sacred to Brahmā; and to offer the oblation to the pitṛs with the portion of the hand sacred to the pitṛs; and that to the gods with the portion of the hand sacred to the gods; and the offering to the prajāpati with his own portion of the hand.

An exposition of things permitted and forbidden.

Madālasā describes what food may be eaten and what not—how various things are to be cleaned when impure, and what things are always pure—how one who has contracted impurity should purify himself—what actions and conduct one should avoid—She insists on the necessity of maintaining the daily sacrifice—She mentions what holidays are allowed the various castes—She describes certain post-funeral ceremonies—and purification after deaths and births.

Next do you hearken to the remedial measures for things forbidden and permitted. Rice should be eaten that has been kept awhile, mixed with oil, and long stored; and wheat, barley, and butter-milk and preparations thereof unmixed with oil.

The hare, the tortoise, the go-sāmp,¹ the porcupine and the rhinoceros, my son—these indeed may be eaten; and the domestic pig and fowl should be eschewed. The remains of food at a śrāddha after the pitṛs and gods and other recipients have been satisfied may be eaten at the dossier of the brāhmaṇas. A man who eats flesh that has been killed for the purpose of medicine is not defiled.

A wise man should never stand in gardens and other places in the afternoons. Nor should one hold converse with a woman hated by the populace or with a widow. One should cast remnants of food, ordure, urine and the water used for washing the feet, outside the house. Without taking up five piṇḍas one should not bathe in another man's water; one should bathe in holy ponds, and in the Ganges, in lakes and rivers.

Being thus instructed by his mother, Rta-dhvaja's son attained his youth and duly married a wife, and begat sons, and as a lord offered sacrifices, and always closely observed his father's commands. Then after a long time Rta-dhvaja, on reaching extreme old age, anointed his son in the sovereignty, and with righteous soul desirous to depart to the forest to practise austerities in company with his wife descended from his throne, a mighty protector, an illustrious king.

The conversation between the Father and Son (continued).

The discrimination of the Soul

Alarka ruled righteously and prosperously, but was greatly addicted to pleasure—His brother Subāhu, wishing to correct him, formed an alliance with the Icing of Kāśī—Both attacked Alarka to wrest the kingdom from, him, and reduced him to great straits—In his distress he looks at Madālasā's token-ring and seeks relief from Dattātreya—He explains to Dattātreya wherein lies his suffering, and launches into a metaphysical disquisition on the soul, the mind, the body, and pleasure and pain.

And Alarka also, righteous in soul, protected justly and like children his glad people who practised each his own business. Inflicting punishment on the wicked, and worthily affording protection to the peaceable, he experienced intense delight; and he offered great sacrifices.

And there were born to him sons, mighty and valiant, righteous in soul, magnanimous, who were adversaries to evil conduct. And he amassed wealth by means of righteousness, and righteousness again by means of wealth; and since those two things are not antagonistic, he enjoyed even the pleasures of sense. , Thus many years passed away as if but a single day, while he ruled the earth, devoted to righteousness, wealth and the gratification of his desires. No feelings of indifference occurred while he enjoyed his loved objects of sense; nor again did he grow satiated in amassing righteousness and wealth.

His brother Subāhu, who roamed the forests, heard that he was thus besotted in his attachment to pleasure, and uncontrolled in his senses. The prince, being desirous of admonishing him, pondered long and concluded that an alliance on his part with the king's enemies would be beneficial to the king. Then he cleverly made repeated visits to the king of Kāśī, who had numerous armies and chariots, as his protector, in order to regain his kingdom.

That king collected together his army against Alarka, and despatched a messenger to demand that the kingdom should be given up to Subāhu. Alarka refused, cognizant of his own justice, to give up the kingdom then in obedience to that command, and returned answer to the messenger of the king of Kāśī—"Let my elder brother come to me with affection and ask for the kingdom for himself. I will not yield up the smallest bit of territory through fear on an attack."Even wise Subāhu made no request then. Supplication is not the duty of kṣatriyas, for he was mighty in valour.

Then the king of Kāśī accompanied by all his army marched to attack the country of king Alarka. And forthwith forming a close union with the contiguous kings he attacked with some of their many vassals, and reduced him to subjection. And without harassing Alarka's neighbouring kings by molesting their realms, he thus subjugated both the governors of the fortresses and the forest tribes. He reduced into submission some kings by bribes, and some by creating dissension, and others who were well-affected towards Alarka by conciliation.

Then the king with his small army, harassed by the adversary's host, found his treasury depleted extremely by the foe that blockaded his city. And being thus straitened and with his treasury diminishing daily, he fell into intense dejection and perplexity of mind. After suffering the keenest pain, he then bethought him of the ring, about which his mother Madālasā had formerly spoken to him.

Then bathing and purifying himself, he addressed the brāhmaṇas, and drawing out the ring saw the motto thereof in clear characters. The king pronounced what his mother had written thereon, while the hair of his body was visibly standing erect, and his eyes were expanded with joy—'Association must be shunned by every soul; if to shun it be impossible, it should be formed with the good, for association with the good is a panacea. Love must be shunned by every soul; if to eschew it be impossible, it should be displayed towards the desire for final emancipation from existence, for that desire is a cure therefor.'

Now having exclaimed repeatedly, 'How can men really attain bliss?' and having decided that it was through the desire for final emancipation since that desire is appropriate¹ thereto, the king next pondering upon association with the good, and suffering the most poignant grief, visited illustrious Dattātreya.

यदि स्यान्मम किं न स्यादन्यस्थेऽपि हितं मयि॥ ३३॥

It is not myself, nor the earth, nor the sea, nor the stars, nor the wind, nor the air; but I wish for happiness in bodily concerns. Pleasure and pain pass to deficiency or excess in this body composed of five elements: what welfare should I not get, if such I might have, in another body wherein I should possess a constant and perfect good-disposition and should be raised and depressed through inequalities?

नित्यप्रभूतसद्भावे न्यूनाधिक्यान्नतोन्नते।

तन्मात्रावस्थिते सूक्ष्मे तृतीयांशे च पश्यतः।

तथैव भूतसद्भावं शारीरं किं सुखासुखम्॥ ३५॥

Moreover a man of self-denial is perceived by his difference from others. And so does bodily pleasure or pain generate a good disposition in one who looks upon the subtle third portion which exists merely a moment?

मनस्यवस्थितं दुःखं सुखं वा मानसं च यत्।

नाहङ्कारो न च मनो बुद्धिर्नाहं यतस्ततः।

अन्तःकरणजं दुःखं पारक्यं मम तत्कथम्॥ ३७॥

Since pain dwells in the mind,² and pleasure again is a mental thing; therefore neither pain nor pleasure belong to the Ego; for the Mind is not the Ego. Inasmuch as neither Self-consciousness,³ nor Mind, nor Intellect⁴ is the Ego, why then does the in-born pain in something else affect me? Since the Ego is not the Body, nor the Mind, the Ego is distinct from the Body and the Mind.

Therefore let pleasures and pains dwell in the Mind or in the Body; how is the Ego concerned hereat? If my elder brother covets the sovereignty over this body, it is an aggregate of five elements.

How then is my Self concerned with the action of the qualities therein? He when seated therein and I are distinct as regards the Body.

Hence my Self has no foe, it has no pain, it has no pleasure, nor city, nor treasury, nor army composed of horses, elephants, neither has he, nor a third person, nor any one, nor have I any of these things.

A series of questions. Dattātreyā moralizes on the consciousness of Self and its results, under the parable of a tree and asserts the non-materiality of the Soul. Alarka asks for instruction about Yoga or religious devotion.

No whit of affliction have I, O brāhmaṇa, when I look on things in a proper frame of mind : those who look on things amiss are always sunk in a sea of unhappiness. In whatever thing a man's intellect becomes self-engrossed, he receives woes therefrom and pays them back. There is not so much pain when a cat eats an unselfish sparrow or mouse, as when it eats a domestic fowl. I then feel neither pain nor pleasure, since I am beyond the material world.² Whoever is subject to created things by means of created things, is indeed sensitive to pleasure and pain.

From my question indeed has this sublime knowledge sprung up in you, who has cast off the conviction 'it is mine', as if it were the cotton of the seemul tree.³

With the thought 'it is I' the germ has sprung up; with the thought 'it is mine', the germ has grown shoulder-high: and home and lands are its topmost boughs; children and wife and other relations are its young shoots; wealth and corn are its great leaves; it has developed not once only; and merit and demerit are its outmost flowers; pleasure and pain are its full-grown fruit. There it fills the path of final emancipation; it oozes out at the commingling of fools; it is rich with festoons of bees which are the desire to be doing; knowledge of what ought to be done is the full-grown tree. Those who, wearied with the road of worldly existence, betake themselves to its shade are dominated by error, knowledge and happiness; where is their superiority? But those, who hew down the tree of selfishness with the axe of learning, which is sharpened on the whet-stone of association with the good, travel along that path. Reaching the cool, dustless, thornless grove of religious knowledge, the wise, ceasing from action, attain supreme emancipation from existence.

Therefore, O brāhmaṇa, mighty in knowledge! Expound religious devotion⁴ properly to me, who thus beseech you, prostrate before you, for association with the good is beneficial to men.

Yoga or Religious Devotion

Dattātreya continues his exhortation—Final emancipation from existence is attained through yoga or religious devotion—and the means are restraint of the breath, mental abstractions, restraint of the senses and deep meditations. These means are analysed and explained at length. What circumstances are inimical to yoga. The improper performance of yoga entails bodily ailments. How such bodily ailments may be cured. The signs of the proper performance of yoga.

Dattātreya spoke

A yogi's removal of ignorance by the attainment of knowledge is 'mukti'; this is union with Brahma and separation from the three qualities of Nature. 'Mukti' or final emancipation from existence, comes from religious devotion; and religious devotion comes rightly from knowledge, O king; knowledge comes through suffering; suffering is the lot of those whose minds are engrossed with self. Hence the man who desires final emancipation should strenuously discard every association; when associations drop, the designation 'it is mine' disappears. Freedom from selfishness tends indeed to happiness; the perception of faults comes from passionlessness; and passionlessness comes indeed from knowledge; knowledge is preceded by passionlessness. That is one's house, where one resides; that is food, by which one lives; that which tends to final emancipation is described as knowledge or ignorance.

First indeed the soul must be conquered by soul; it is indeed a hard victory for religious devotees. He should put forth effort in that victory. Hear from me the means thereto. He should burn up his faults by restraining his breath¹ and his stains by steady mental abstraction,² his sensual enjoyments by restraining his senses,³ and his unbridled qualities by deep meditation.¹ Just as impurities are burnt out of metals when they are melted, so the faults wrought by the organs of sense are burnt out by restraining the breath. The religious devotee should first accomplish the regulation of his breath.

Now stopping the inhalation² is designated prāṇāyāma, 'restraining the breath'. Prāṇāyāma is of three kinds, which are named the 'slight,' the 'medium' and the 'intense.'³ I will describe its measure; hear it of me, O Alarka! The 'slight' extends during twelve mātrās or prosodial instants, and the 'medium' is double that and the 'intense' is well-known as containing thrice that number of instants. The time of a mātrā is that of the winking and opening the eye-lids once. The measure of twelve mātrās is fixed for the reckoning of the prāṇāyāma. With the first he should overcome perspiration and with the second agitation and with the third dejection; he should gradually overcome his faults. Now as lions, tigers and elephants, when kindly treated become mild, so the breath falls within the control of the religious devotee.

As an elephant-driver brings a rutting elephant under control according to his wish, even so a religious devotee who has the wish brings his breath to perfect control. For as the proud lion when tamed does not attack deer, so the obstructed wind destroys men's guilt but not their body. Therefore the religious devotee while engaged in devotion should pay good heed to the restraining of his breath.

Adopting the padma half seat, and the svastika sitting posture, he should utter the syllable Om! in his heart and practise his religious devotion. Sitting evenly on an even seat, drawing in both his feet, and firmly fixing his thighs rightly in front, he should cover his mouth; he should sit without touching his private parts with his heels, with his senses under control; he should raise his head slightly; he should not close his teeth together. Gazing at the tip of his own nose and not looking around, the religious devotee should conceal the activity of darkness with passion, and that of passion with goodness, and taking his stand in unsullied goodness should practise devotion. He should hold in his organs of sense from their objects of sense, and his breath and other faculties and his mind, he should advance to abstraction with a steadfast cohesion. But he who should draw in his desires, as a tortoise draws in all its limbs, always delighting in soul and self-collected, sees soul in soul. The wise man after purifying himself externally and internally, and filling out his body from the navel to the neck, should advance to abstraction. A 'dhāraṇā,' or steady mental abstraction, is called twelve prāṇāyāmas. Two kinds of dhāraṇā are known in religious devotion by devotees who are conversant with the truth. Moreover when a religious devotee is steeped in devotion and controls his soul, all his faults perish, and he becomes whole; and he sees supreme Brahma and the qualities of Nature separately, the sky and the primordial atoms and the unsullied soul.

Thus a religious devotee, who restricts his food and who is intent on restraining his breath, should occupy ground, which has been thoroughly and gradually reclaimed, as it were his house. Unreclaimed ground when it is taken possession of increases faults, diseases and foolishness, therefore he should not occupy unreclaimed ground.

'Prāṇāyāma' or restraining the breath is so called from the restriction¹ placed on the breath; and this is called 'dhāraṇā' or mental abstraction, by which the mind is abstracted; since the organs, which are occupied with words and other actions, are restrained by religious devotees by means of devotion, that is called 'pratyāhāra,' or restraining the senses.

And the means for this is declared by paramarshis who were religious devotees, so that diseases and other faults may not spring up in a religious devotee. Just as the thirsty may drink water gradually by vessels, pipes and other means, so a religious devotee who has overcome his distress may drink air. First in the navel, and next in the heart, and thirdly in the breast, then in the neck, the mouth, the tip of the nose, in the eye, eye-brows, and the middle of the head, and in what is there-beyond, is known the highest mental abstraction. By attaining to these ten mental abstractions he reaches equality with the imperishable. Not puffed up, nor hungry, nor wearied, and undisturbed in mind, the yogī should practice his yoga respectfully in order to attain final occupation, O king!

When it is neither very cold nor warm, when there is no strife, when it is not windy at these times the ascetic who is deep in meditation should not² practice yoga. In a place where there is a noise, or fire, or water, or where study is going on, in a decayed cow-shed, at a place where four roads meet, amid a collection of dry leaves, in a river, in a burning-ground, in a place infested by snakes, in a place of fear, or on the edge of a well, amid a number of funeral piles or ant-hills—in these places a learned man should avoid practising yoga. And if there is no appearance of goodness, he should avoid the place and time. There should be no sight of evil during the practice of yoga; hence he should avoid that. Whoever disregards these places and in his infatuation practises yoga, verily his faults tend to his hindrance. Hearken to me in this. Deafness, stupidity, failure of memory, dumbness, blindness and fever—those several evils straightway befall him who practises yoga in ignorance.

In the diseases of rheumatism, flatulence, and enlargement of the abdomen, circulation of the internal or obstructed wind of the body should be regulated by a diet of rice-gruel.¹ In tremor² a yogī should fix his mind on a mountain as it is steady, in dumbness on the faculty of speech, and in deafness on the ear; just as one whose tongue is parched with thirst should meditate on a mango fruit. In whatever respect the body is disordered, in that very respect he should think steadily of whatever thought may remedy the disorder, such as, a cooling thought amidst heat, and a heating thought amidst cold. He should place a stake on his head and beat wood with wood.

In that way memory immediately recurs to a yogī who has lost his memory. He should think steadily of the wind and fire which indeed pervade the heaven and the earth. These injuries are cured through what is non-human or what springs from goodness. If goodness that is non-human should enter within a yogī, he should utterly burn out the sin that dwells in his body by steady thought of the wind and fire.

Thus must every soul that is wise in yoga compass its preservation, O king, since the body is the means of attaining righteousness, wealth, love and final emancipation from existence. The yogī's knowledge perishes through perplexity at the narration of the marks of the activities, therefore the activities must be hidden. Tranquillity,³ perfect health, gentleness, a pleasant odour, scanty excretions, a fine complexion, benignity, and softness of voice, are indeed the first indications of the activity of yoga. A loving person proclaims one's virtues in one's absence. That creature who does not fear him is the chiefest sign of complete perfection.

The Yogī's bliss.

Dattātreya explains to Alarka the ailments that beset a yogī's soul and mentions their five varieties. He describes the yogī's duties, the stages by which final emancipation is attained, the eight premonitory marks of final emancipation, and the results of union with the Supreme Spirit.

Dattātreyā spoke

I will succinctly declare to you the ailments¹ that prevail in the soul of a yogī when it is viewed; hearken to me.

काम्याः क्रियास्तथा कामान्मानुषानभिवाञ्छति।

स्त्रियो दानफलं विद्यां मायां कुप्यं धनं दिवम्॥ २॥

देवत्वमपरेशत्वं रसायनवयः क्रियाम्।

श्राद्धानां सर्वदानानां फलानि नियमांस्तथा।

तथोपवासात्पूर्त्तच्च देवताभ्यर्चनादपि॥ ४॥

He longs for rites performed with a view to future fruition, and the objects of human desire, for women, the fruits of alms-giving, for science, for supernatural power, for the baser metal and riches, for heaven, god-head, and supreme god-head, for actions that yield copious supplies of elixir vitae,² for flying on the storm-winds, for sacrifice, and the power of inhabiting water and fire, for the fruits of śrāddhas that contain every gift, and religious mortifications. Thus he longs when mentally ailing by reason of fasting, meritorious acts, and worship of the gods, and by reason of those several actions.

तेभ्यस्तेभ्यश्च कर्मभ्य उपसृष्टोऽभिवाञ्छति।

चित्तमित्यं वर्तमानं यत्नाद्योगी निवर्तयेत्॥ ५॥

योगिनः संप्रवर्तन्ते सात्त्वराजसतामसाः।

A yogī should strenuously restrain his mind when beset with such thoughts. By making his mind cling to Brahma he is liberated from ailments. When these ailments are overcome other ailments still beset a yogī, arising out of goodness, passion and ignorance.

शब्दार्थानखिलान्वेत्ति शब्दं गृह्णाथ चैव यत्॥ ९॥

योजनानां सहस्रेभ्यः श्रावणः सोऽभिधीयते।

Ailments arising from illusive vision,³ from hearing, and from the deity,⁴ and mental aberration,⁵ and enthusiasm⁶—these five are roots of bitterness which tend to embarrass the religious meditations of yogīs. The ailment arising from illusive vision is such to a yogī because in it appear Vedic matters, poetic matters, science and the mechanical arts without end. The ailment connected with hearing is so-called because he perceives the meanings of sounds in all their completeness, and he receives sound from thousands of yojanas.

समन्ताद्दीक्षते चाष्टौ स यदा देवयोनयः॥ १०॥

नाशयेच्चित्तमावर्त्त उपसर्गः स उच्यते।

The wise call that ailment one from the deity, as in the case of a madman, when like a god he sees all around and in the eight directions. When the yogī's mind wanders without support through his own fault by reason of his fall from all the rules of good custom⁷—that is well known as mental aberration. When the seething whirlpool⁸ of knowledge like a whirlpool of water engulphs the mind—that ailment is called enthusiasm.

एतैर्नाशितयोगास्तु सकला देवयोनयः॥ १३॥

उपसर्गैर्महाघोरैरावर्त्तन्ते पुनः पुनः।

All beings of divine origin, when their religious meditation is destroyed by these great and terrible ailments, revolve again and again.

A yogī should always be intent on religious meditation, he should eat sparingly, he should subdue his senses. The yogī should contemplate in his head the subtle conditions of the seven objects, viz., earth; he should contemplate the subtle earth, until he comprehends its subtlety.¹

He deems the earth to be his soul, and he quits its bonds. Moreover he quits the subtle taste in water,² and also the form in the fire; and he likewise quits touch in the wind, as he bears the subtle form in mind; and he quits the subtle activity of the sky, and likewise its sound. When he enters with his mind into the mind of all created things, his mind bearing a mental subtle condition of them becomes subtle also. Likewise the man, conversant with religious devotion, on attaining to the intellect of all creatures, gains and relinquishes the most perfect subtlety of intellect. For the man conversant with religious devotion, who relinquishes these seven subtle things after having thoroughly comprehended them, there is no retrogression, O Alarka! The soul-cognisant man, after fully seeing the subtlety of these subtle conditions of the seven objects, then utterly abandoning it may proceed to supreme bliss.

तस्मिन्स्तस्मिन्समासक्तिं सम्प्राप्य स विनश्यति॥ २४ ॥

And towards whatever created thing he evinces feeling, O king ! to that very thing he becomes attached, and he perishes. Therefore the corporeal being, who after perceiving the mutually-associated subtle things abandons them, may gain supreme bliss.

एतान्येव तु संघाय सप्त सूक्ष्माणि पार्थिव।

भूतादीनां विनाशोऽत्र सद्भावज्ञस्य मुक्तये॥ २६ ॥

Having conjoined these very seven subtle things, O king! passionlessness towards created and other things tends to the final emancipation from existence of the man cognisant of the entities.³

When he becomes attached to perfumes and other delights, he perishes; he again reverts to human nature apart from Brahma. Whatever subtle created, thing the yogī desires, after transcending the subtle conditions of these seven objects, in that very thing he meets his extinction, O king! He meets his extinction in the bodies of gods or Asuras, or of Gandharvas, Nāgas, or Rākṣasas; nowhere does he gain any attachment.

Where minuteness, and lightness,¹ greatness and the power of obtaining every thing, freedom of will,² and lordship, and magical domination and again self-mortification are—one finds these eight sovereign-like qualities fully indicate union with the Supreme Spirit,³ O king. The quality of minuteness is far subtler than the subtle; lightness means swiftness; greatness consists in being universally revered; the power of obtaining everything, inasmuch as nothing is impossible of obtainment by him; freedom of will consists in his power of pervading all things; and lordship inasmuch as he is lord; magical domination indeed, the yogi's seventh quality consists in his subjugating things; where the wishes are said to remain stationary,⁴ there⁵ is self-mortification. By these causes of sovereignty I have declared O king! in eight points the indicatory marks⁶ of the yogi's final emancipation from existence, and of his sublime union with the Supreme Spirit.

Thenceforth for him there is no birth, nor growth, nor death; he neither decays nor does he alter; neither from Bhūr and the other worlds, nor from the family of created beings, does he experience severance, or moisture, or burning or dryness; nor is he captivated by sounds or other sensual impressions; nor do sounds and other impressions exist for him; one who experiences them is not united with them.

 निर्दग्धदोषस्तेनैक्यं प्रयाति ब्रह्मणा सह॥ ३९॥

For as an impure lump of gold, when its impurities are purged away by fire, unites with another lump into one, and undergoes no difference; even so the ascetic, when his faults are burnt out by the fire of religious devotion, unites with Brahma.

यथाग्निरग्नौ संक्षिप्तः समानत्वमनुव्रजेत्।

As fire when thrown into fire may attain sameness; and, bearing the same name and having the same substance may not be perceived by any distinction; even so the yogi, when his stains are burnt away, attains to union with supreme Brahma, and never acquires a separate existence, O king! As water when thrown into water unites, so the yogi's soul attains to sameness in the Supreme Soul.

The Yogī's religious course

Dattātreya expounds to Alarka how a yogī should live—from whom he should gather his alms—what his alms should be—how he should eat after worshipping the five vital airs—what his religious obligations are—and how he attains to final emancipation from existence.

अलर्क उवाच

Alarka spoke

Adorable Sir ! I desire to hear thoroughly about a yogī's religious course, since the yogī while pursuing the way to Brahma does not sink into despondency.

Dattātreya spoke

Respect and disrespect, which two things cause men pleasure and distress, these are opposites and effect the yogī's final bliss. Respect and disrespect, these two things men indeed describe as poison and ambrosia; of them disrespect is ambrosia, but respect is a dire poison.

The yogī should nowhere become a guest, nor attend śrāddhas, or sacrifices, pilgrimages to the gods, or festivals, nor visit the banker for the sake of any advantage. The yogī should roam about for alms among what is flung away, among what is smokeless, where the charcoal is extinguished, among all people who have eaten, but not constantly among all the three.

The yogī should not move about occupied in religious meditation and spoiling the path of the good, so as that folk should despise him or treat him with disrespect. He should seek his alms among house-holders, and at the houses of vagrant mendicants:¹ his livelihood is declared to be the best and first one. Also the ascetic should ever resort to modest, faithful, tranquil and high-souled brāhmaṇa house-holders who are learned in the Vedas; above and after them, to uncorrupt and non-outcasted men. The practice of seeking alms among men of no caste is the last livelihood he should wish for.

He should drink water once again, and after rinsing out his mouth, he should touch his heart.

Honesty and sanctity, self-sacrifice, and uncovetousness, and harmlessness are the five principal religions obligations of mendicants.

1 Priyangu, Panicum italicum, (Roxb, p 101)

2 Prāna, this has its seat in the lungs and expresses pre-eminently life and vitality

3 Apāna, the vital air that goes downwards and out at the anus

4 Samāna, the vital air that circulates about the navel and is essential to digestion

5 Udāna, the vital air that rises up the throat and passes into the head

6 Vyāna, the vital air that circulates or is diffused through the body

Freedom from anger, reverence towards gurus, purity, abstemiousness in food, and constant study of the Vedas—these are the five well-known observances. He should devote himself to essential knowledge, which can effect his objects; for the multiplicity of knowledge that exists here is a hindrance to religious meditation. He who acts with the thirst, that he ought to know this and he ought to know that, may perhaps never gain that knowledge in thousands of ages.

Discarding associations, subduing anger, eating sparingly, and controlling his organs, he should regulate the gates of his body by the intellect, and apply the understanding to profound contemplation. The yogī who is constantly occupied with religious meditation should always have due recourse to profound contemplation, in empty places and in caves and in forests. Control over the speech, control over the actions, and control over the mind, are the three controls: he who invariably possesses these controls is a great 'three-control' ascetic. Who, O king, is agreeable, and who is disagreeable to him to whom all this universe, both real and unreal, and composed of good qualities and bad qualities, is composed of the Supreme Soul?

When he whose intellect is purified, to whom clods and gold are alike, and whose mind is thus composed towards all created things, comprehends the supreme eternal and immutable to be the supreme condition he ceases to be born again. The Vedas and all sacrifices and ceremonies are very good; prayer is better than sacrifice; and the path of knowledge than prayer; and profound contemplation cut off from associations and feelings is better than knowledge; when that is attained, the eternal is gained. He who is composed in mind, who is intent on Brahma, who is attentive, and pure, whose delight is concentrated on one object, and who controls his organs—that high-souled man may compass this yoga or religious meditation; thereupon he gains final emancipation from existence through his own religious meditation.

A and U and M are its three letters; these are its three instants; they are characterized by goodness, passion and ignorance. And another, a half instant,¹ which has its seat on the top of the syllable, is without quality and can be understood by yogīs only. It is called gāndhārī,² as it is to be uttered in the gāndhāra note.³ Being pronounced it reaches the head, and it conveys the feeling of ants moving over the body.

As the syllable OM being pronounced reaches the head, the yogī who is lost in meditation of OM should become united with Brahma, the Supreme Soul. Life is his bow, the soul is his arrow, Brahma is the target sublime. It is to be pierced by the heedful man; he should be united with Brahma, as the arrow becomes embedded in the target.

मात्राः सार्द्धाश्च त्रिस्रश्च विज्ञेयाः परमार्थतः॥१॥

तत्र युक्तस्तु यो योगी स तल्लयमवाप्नुयात्।

The syllable OM, consisting of three and a half instants, should be known in its true sense as the three Vedas—the R̥c, Sāma and Yajus—the three worlds, the three fires, and the three deities Viṣṇu, Brahmā and Śiva. And the yogī, who is absorbed in religious meditation thereon, may obtain extinction therein.

Moreover the letter A is designated the bhūr-loka, or terrestrial world; and the letter U the bhuvar-loka, or atmospheric world; and the letter M with its nasal mark is decided to be the svar-loka, or celestial world. Now the first instant is called the discrete,¹ and the second the indiscreet, and the third instant is the intellectual faculty;² the half instant is the highest abode.³ In this very order must these stages of religious meditation be known. By uttering the word OM, everything both existent and non-existent may be grasped. Now the first instant is short, the second is long, and the third is prolated, and the half instant is not cognisant to speech.

Such is this word. Brahma is designated the Supreme "Om". The man who truly understands it and further meditates on it, escaping the circle of mundane existence casts off the three-fold bonds, and gains sublime extinction in Brahma, the Supreme Soul. And he who is bound with the unconsumed results of his actions, after experiencing death through ill omens,⁴ and recollecting it at the time of his departure, attains to a yogī's condition again. Hence by means of imperfect religious devotion, or again by perfected religions devotion, are always to be known the ill omens; so that he does not sink into despondency at the time of his departure.

An account of the Omens

Dattātreya mentions the signs of approaching and impending death, which are partly natural phenomena and partly dreams—also the appropriate seasons for religious devotion—and by various similes and apophthegms indicates how final emancipation from existence is to be attained—Alarka thanks Dattātreya for all the instruction and, going to the king of Kāśī and Subāhu, relinquishes his kingdom in their favour.

2. Cic-chakti.

3. Final emancipation from existence.

The man who does not see the path of the gods,¹ the pole-star, the planet Venus, the moon's shadow and the morning star,² may not live more than a year. The man, who sees the sun's orb devoid of rays and fire encircled with rays, does not live more than eleven months. He, who in his dreams clearly perceives gold and silver in his vomit and in his urine and faeces, may live ten months. He who sees departed persons, Piśācas and other demons and the cities of the Gandharvas and golden-coloured bulls, lives nine months.

He who when stout becomes thin, and when thin becomes stout quite unaccountably, and loses his natural functions, lives for eight months. He, whose foot becomes cracked at the heel or at the toe in dust and in mud, lives seven months.

If a vulture, a pigeon, a raven, or a crow, or a hawk, or a blue bird alights on one's head, that indicates a life of six months. When a man is assailed by flocks of crows or a shower of dust, or when he sees his shadow unnatural, he lives four or five months. When he sees lightning flashing in the south in a cloudless sky, or sees a rainbow at night, his life will last two or three months. He who cannot see his own body in clarified butter, in oil, in a mirror, or in water, or who sees it headless, does not live more than a month.

When the smell from a yogi's body resembles that of a goat or the smell from a corpse, know O king that his life will be half a month. When one's breast and foot dry up immediately after he has bathed, and when water does not quench his thirst as he drinks, he lives ten days.

1. Deva-mārga; said to mean the penis or anus.

2. Arundhatī.

He who sees a single powerful naked mendicant laughing and leaping in his sleep may find death impending. The man, who sees himself sunk to the crown of his head in a sea of mud in his sleep, dies at once. And he, who sees charcoal amidst the hair of the head, or ashes or a waterless river issuing from a serpent, in his sleep, will after ten days die on the eleventh day.

He, who in his sleep is beaten with stones by formidable and hideous black men who raise their weapons aloft, may die at once. He, in front of whom a she-jackal runs howling at sun-rise, whether meeting him or passing him, dies at once. He, whose heart is possessed with hunger immediately after he has eaten, and whose teeth chatter, has without doubt¹ reached the end of his life.

He, whose nose becomes crooked, and whose ears bend down or stick up, and whose left eye waters, has lost his life. When his face becomes reddish, or his tongue black, a wise man should know that his death is impending. And one should know that he, who in his sleep journeys to the south on a camel, or an ass, or a carriage, will die outright.

death is impending over the man who sees his own clean white clothing red or black.

A revolution in men's natural disposition and a reversal in their nature proclaim always that Yama and Death are at hand; as when a man despises and reviles those very persons to whom he has always been well-behaved, and whom he has considered most deserving of his reverence; when he does not worship the gods; when he abuses the aged, the gurus and brāhmanas; and when he shows no kind treatment to his mother, father, or sons-in-law, or to yogīs skilled in learning or to other high-souled men. But when the time arrives, wise men¹ must understand that.

संवत्सरान्ते तज्ज्ञेयं फलदानि दिवानिशम्॥ ३८॥

And yogīs must always diligently understand at the close of the year that ill omens produce their results day and night, O king.

And the obvious very formidable series of results therefrom must be considered; and having ascertained them, he should fix that time in his mind, O king. And having ascertained that time accurately, the yogī should resort to a safe place and apply himself to religious devotion, so that that time may not be fruitless to him. And the yogī having beheld the ill omen and abandoning the fear of death, and having regarded then its nature, as it has come after a long time, should apply himself to religious devotion as an adept therein in just that part of the day, both in the forenoon, and in the after-noon and at mid-day on that day. Or where he has seen that ill omen during a part of the night, there he should engage in religious devotion until that day arrives.

Then abandoning all fear, and mastering that time self-controlled, he should stay in that habitation or wherever he feels his soul firm, and engage in religious meditation on the Supreme Soul after overcoming the three qualities: and when his soul grows composed of the Supreme Soul, he should cease even from the use of his mind. Thereupon he attains to that sublime absorption into the Supreme Soul, which is beyond the senses, which transcends the intellect and which is unspeakable.

When a yogī sees the tender horns of the young ruru deer, which look merely like the forehead-mark, growing together with him, he may attain final beatitude. When a yogī takes a vessel full of liquid from a mound on the earth, and when he sees the human body towering up high, what has he not learnt? When a yogī has truly understood the effort that a man makes, when all his wealth sufficient for his living has been dug up, he has attained success. That is one's house where one dwells; that is food on which one lives; and that is wealth by which one prospers; that is happiness when one thinks 'what self-interest have I in this matter.' Just as a man, although he is importuned by his organs, accomplishes his object by their means, so a yogī may accomplish his highest aim by means of the intellect and other faculties of other persons.

Since this intellectual faculty is single indeed, and there is no other, how then does knowledge create the condition of friend and enemy, of lord and servant? I fell into that dire misery which was produced by fear of you, and I have gained knowledge from Dattātreyā's favour. O king. When one subdues all the senses, and abandons utterly every association, and fixes one's mind on Brahma, in that victory is the sublime victory. And since there is nothing else to be accomplished in order to attain that final beatitude, therefore restraining his senses he attains final beatitude.

Subāhu explains to the king of Kāśī that it was to reclaim his brother Alarka to a proper frame of mind, that he had induced the king to conquer Alarka—Subāhu expounds to the king the conditions of attaining final emancipation from existence, and both depart—Alarka resigns his kingdom to his son, and betaking himself to the forest attains final bliss.

Here ends Jaḍa's exposition to his father.

The Birds then conclude by saying that Jaḍa and his father attained final bliss.

You did stir me up, saying 'Conquer and give me the great kingdom, that belonged to my great-grandfather and is dominated by Alarka.' CHAPTER 42

The Birth of Brahmā

Jaimini thanks the Birds for all the information they have given him, and asks about creation, the world, mankind etc.— In reply they relate what Mārkaṇḍeya, had taught Krauṣṭuki regarding all those matters, as follows.

Mārkaṇḍeya extols this Purāṇa as having emanated from Brahmā and having been handed down by eminent ṛṣis— Adoration is paid to Brahmā.

The identity of Pradhāna and Prakṛti is asserted—Brahmā alone existed at first— From him emanated Pradhāna, which is called the Imperceptible— Out of it issued Mahat (the Intellectual principle)—And out of Mahat issued Ahāṅkāra (the principle of Individuality) with its three characters, the Evolving, the Modifying, and the Energizing—The Evolving Ahāṅkāra created sound, touch, form, taste and smell, and their corresponding elements, ether, air, light, water and earth—The Modifying Ahāṅkāra produced the eleven human organs—The characters of the elements are expounded.

Mahat and the other principles produced an egg, the composition of which is described—It was animated by Brahmā as the Soul and it contained the universe, the gods, demons and mankind.

You have well related this to me, O noble brāhmaṇas, both activity and inactivity, the two-fold deeds enjoined by the Veda. Ah, through your father's favour, you have such knowledge as this, by which you have overcome folly although you have descended to this animal state. Happy are you in that your mind, steadfast in your pristine state towards the attainment of final emancipation, is not swayed by the bewilderments that spring from objects of sense. O joy that the wise lord Mārkaṇḍeya made you known to me as the dissipators of every doubt! For men who wander in this closely-thronged mundane existence there is available association with such as your honours; not for ascetics. If I after gaining association with you who have perspicacity in knowledge should not succeed in my object, then assuredly¹ there can be no success for me elsewhere. Both in activity and in inactivity, in knowledge and deed, no one else has, I think, a mind so unsullied as your honours have.

And how will it fall into dissolution at the proper time, most excellent brāhmaṇas? And how came the families² that sprang from the gods, the ṛṣis, the pitṛs, created things? Formerly as soon as Brahmā, whose origin is inscrutable, came into being, this Purāṇa and the Vedas issued¹ from his mouths; and many paramarṣis composed the collections of the Purāṇas; and the Vedas were divided by them in a thousand ways. Righteousness and knowledge, passionlessness, and sovereignty—these four indeed were not perfected without instruction from him, the high-souled. His seven mind-born² ṛsis took the Vedas from him, and his mind-born ancient munis took the Purāṇa. Cyavana took it from Bhṛgu, and he declared it to the brāhmaṇa, and this purāṇa was repeated by the high-souled ṛṣi is to Dakṣa; and then Dakṣa repeated it to me. I will now tell it to you : it destroys strife and sin. Hear all this from me with composure, illustrious Muni, as I formerly heard it when Dakṣa related it.

Subsequent to the dissolution, all this universe was pervaded by him completely.

Then from it was evolved Ahankāra,⁶ which is three-fold, the Modifying,⁷ the Energizing,⁸ and the Evolving⁹ which is characterized by darkness. And it was enveloped by Mahat, just as Mahat was by the Imperceptible.

Now the Evolving Ahankāra, modifying itself, created the subtle element¹⁰ of sound¹¹ next. From the subtle element of sound came the Ether, which has the property of sound; now ether is the sound-element, and the evolving Ahankāra enveloped it then. The subtle element of touch is indeed born next without doubt; the mighty Air is born, its property of touch is well known. And the air, modifying itself, created the subtle element of form; Light was produced from the air; it is said to have the property of form; the air which is the element of touch enveloped the element of form. And light, modifying itself created the subtle element of taste; therefrom indeed water also was produced; it has the property of taste; now the element of form enveloped the water¹ which is the element of taste. And the water, modifying itself, created the subtle element of smell; therefrom Solid Matter² is produced; smell is well known to be its property.

Now in each element resides its peculiar subtle element; thereby its possession of that subtle element is a well-established fact. And hence those elements are uniform, inasmuch as no difference can be predicated. They are all neither calm, nor terrible, nor crass.³ This is the creation of the elements and the subtle elements from Ahankāra when it is characterized by darkness.

Such are the Vaikārika deities known to be. The ear, the skin, the pair of eyes, the tongue, and fifthly the nose; men say⁷ these are the organs connected with the intellect for the purpose of perceiving sound and the other impressions. The pair of feet, the anus, the organ of generation, the pair of hands, and the voice may rank as fifth with them; walking, evacuation, sexual delight, manual work and speech—that is the work for each of these organs respectively.

Sound, and touch and form—when the element of taste accrued to them, then Water with its four properties came into existence; it is to be known as being characterized by taste. Within the earth is contained all this² visible and invisible world firmly enclosed. And those distinguishing marks are perceptible by the organs of sense, and are recollected by reason of their permanency. They take each successive one the property of its preceding one. These seven principles when uncombined are distinct and have various energies: they could not have created mankind, unless they had united. And meeting in mutual combination, they become mutually dependent; and when they all unite into one, they have the marks of a single complex body.

By reason of their being governed by the Soul³ and also through the favour of the Imperceptible, Mahat and the other principles, which have different limits, cause an egg to come into existence. There like a bubble on water, the egg gradually increased by means of the things that existed, O Sage most intelligent! In its enlarged state it lay on the water. The Soul,⁴ having increased inside the egg sprung from Prakṛti, took the name Brahmā; it indeed was the first corporeal being, it indeed is called Puruṣa. And Brahmā existed first, the original maker of created beings. That egg enclosed all these three worlds with all that they contain moveable and immovable. Meru was born from it, and as the after-birth were born the mountains; the oceans were the fluid contained within that egg which held the great Soul. Within that egg was all this world, with the gods and demons and mankind, and the continents and other lands, the mountains and oceans, and the throng of luminous worlds.

Then the egg was enveloped by water, air, fire and ether and by the evolving Ahaṅkāra externally, ten times over by each of them. It was then surrounded⁵ by Mahat which I have mentioned, which had the same magnitude. Mahat together with them all was enveloped by the Imperceptible. With these seven coverings formed from Prakṛti was the egg enveloped. Enveloping one another the eight Prakṛtis existed. This very Prakṛti is permanent; and that Puruṣa is limited by it.

Hear you, moreover, briefly of him who is spoken of by the name Brahmā. Just as one sunk in water, on emerging from it, seems to be born from water¹ and flings the water away, so Brahmā is both Prakṛti and the Soul.² The Imperceptible is declared to be his sphere of action;³ hence Brahmā is called Kṣetrajaña, the Soul. A man should know all these characteristics of the Soul and its sphere of action.

The computation of Brahmā's life

Mārkaṇḍeya moralizes on Brahmā and Prakṛti—and describes Viṣṇu and Śiva as special forms of Brahmā—He explains how human and divine years are reckoned, the duration of the four ages, the Kṛta, the Tretā, the Dvāpara and the Kali, and of a Manvantara, and the length of Brahmā's day and life.

Adorable Sir! you has related to me correctly the genesis of the egg, and you has told me of the birth of the mighty Soul Brahmā within the egg of Brahmā. I wish to hear this from you, O scion of Bhṛgu's race, when things are not created, and nothing exists, everything having been destroyed by Time at the end of the dissolution of the Universe.

When all this universe becomes dissolved in Nature,⁴ this dissolution is designated 'natural'⁵ by the wise. When the Imperceptible subsists within itself, and when all modification is suspended, Nature and the Soul⁶ subsist with sameness of character. Then both darkness and goodness subsist in equipoise, neither being in excess or in deficiency, and permeated by each other. Just as oil exists in sesamum seeds, or as ghee in milk, so passion also exists permeant within darkness and goodness.

The day of the Supreme Lord¹ lasts from the birth of Brahmā, as long as the two half paras which compose his life;² and his night during the dissolution is of the same duration.³ Now at the dawn of day he awakes, he who is the origin of the universe, who is without beginning, who is the cause of all things, whose soul transcends thought; every one else works in an inferior way.

The Supreme God, quickly enters into Nature and the Soul, as the lord of the universe, and agitates them with his intense supernatural power. Just as love, or a breeze of Spring, entering into young women tends to produce agitation, so does he, who is the embodiment of supernatural power.

 भुञ्जन्प्रवर्तते सर्गे ब्रह्मत्वं समुपाश्रितः॥१३॥

When Pradhāna is agitated, the god Brahmā is born and is contained within the cavity of the egg, as I have already told you. At first he is the agitator; as the husband of Nature, he is the thing to be agitated; and he exists with contraction and expansion even in the state of Pradhāna. He is born, though he is the birth-place of the universe; though devoid of qualities, he possesses the quality of passion; when he assumes the character of Brahmā, he engages in creation.

 क्षणं वियोगो न ह्येषां न त्यन्ति परस्परम्॥१९॥

In the character of Brahmā he creates mankind; then possessing an excess of goodness, he becomes Viṣṇu and protects them righteously; then, with darkness preponderating in him, he has Rudra dissolves the whole universe with its three worlds, and sleeps. He possesses the three qualities, and yet he is destitute of qualities. Just as he is at first the pervading Soul, then the preserver, and lastly the destroyer,⁴ so he takes appellations which designate him as Brahmā, Viṣṇu or Śiva. As Brahmā he creates the world; and as Rudra he destroys them; and as Viṣṇu he holds a neutral position. These are the three conditions of the Self-existent, Passion and Brahmā; darkness and Rudra; goodness and Viṣṇu the lord of the world: these indeed are the three deities; these indeed are the three qualities. These verily are mutually paired, and are mutually dependant: they are not separated for a moment; they do not forsake one another.

4. Lāvaka (from lū), one who cuts to pieces, one who destroys. Would not lāyaka (from li) be better, one who brings on the dissolution?

Thus Brahmā, the four-faced god of gods, is anterior to the universe: assuming the quality of passion, he engages in creation.

One hundred years is the full length of life for him, the high-souled, according to the true Brāhmya computation. Hear from me how it is reckoned.

A day and night among men contain, it has been settled, thirty muhūrtas; and with thirty days are reckoned the two lunar fortnights and the month; of six months consists the sun's half-yearly course; the two half-yearly courses on the south and north of the equator compose the year. Such a year is a day and night of the gods;¹ the day thereof is the sun's northern half-yearly course.

Now the Krta age is said to have contained four thousand years; its commencing twilight was four hundred years, and the closing twilight was of the same duration. The Tretā age was three thousand divine years; and three hundred years was its commencing twilight, which was indeed of that duration, and its closing twilight was of the same duration.

The Dvāpara age was two thousand years; and its commencing twilight is declared to have been two hundred years, and its closing twilight was two hundred years. The Kali age is a thousand divine years, O brāhmaṇa; two hundreds of years are called its commencing and closing twilights.

एषा द्वादशसाहस्री युगाख्या कविभिः कृता।

This period of twelve thousand divine years is called a yuga; it has been laid down by the poets; a thousand times this period are called one of Brahmā's days.

In one of Brahmā's days, O brāhmaṇa, there may be fourteen Manus. They live according to their portions; that thousand is divided among them. The gods, the seven ṛṣis, and Indra, Manu, and the kings his sons, are created with Manu and pass to dissolution with him in regular order.

एतन्मन्वन्तरं प्रोक्तं दिव्यैर्वर्षैर्निबोध मे॥ ३६॥

Seventy-one repetitions of the four ages, with a fraction in excess, constitute a manvantara; hear from me its computation in human years. Thirty full crores reckoned duly, O brāhmaṇa, and sixty-seven lakhs more by reckoning, and twenty thousands—this is the period of seventy-one times the four ages without the excess fraction; this is called a manvantara.

Hear it from me in divine years; eight hundred thousands of years by divine reckoning,¹ and fifty-two thousands of years more in addition. A day of Brahmā is declared to be this period multiplied fourteen times.² At its termination the dissolution is declared by the wise to be the necessary result, O brāhmaṇa.

1. This line as it stands in the text seems incorrect. The four ages contain 12,000 divine years or 4,320,000 human years, and 71 times this period contain 8,52,000 divine years, or 306,720,000 human years. This latter period agrees with the enumeration in verse 36 (viz., 30,67,20,000 years), but instead of the former the text gives 8,000 + 52,000, i.e., 60,000 divine years, unless we read śata-sahasrāṇi for varṣa-sahasrāṇi. Yuma, however, seems wrong as regards both grammar and meaning.
2. This does not agree with verse 31, if we take the words "this period" to refer to verses 35, 36 and 37. In verse 31 one of Brahma's days is said to be 12,000,000 divine years or 4,320,000,000 human years, but 14 times the period mentioned in the latter verses contain 11,928,000 divine years, or 4,294,080,000 human years. We must bring in here the excess fraction referred to in verse 34, which by calculation is found to be 3/7; thus 71 3/7 times the yuga of 12,000 divine years = 857,142 6/7 divine years of the manvantara, and 14 times this last period exactly = 12,000,000 divine years of Brahmā's day. Similarly with regard to human years.

The Bhūr-loka, the Bhuvar-loka and the Svar-loka are perishable and pass³ to dissolution; and the Mahar-loka stands, yet the dwellers therein by reason of the heat go to the Jana-loka. And Brahmā sleeps indeed during the night in the three worlds which have been dissolved into one ocean. That night is of exactly the same duration. At its termination creation begins again. And so passes one of Brahmā's years, and a hundred years is the whole. For a hundred of his years is denominated a Para; and a Parārdha or half a Para is well-known to be composed of fifty years. So then a Parārdha of his life has elapsed, O brāhmaṇa; at the close of which occurred the Mahā-kalpa, which is famed as the Pādma. Of the second Parārdha which is now passing, O brāhmaṇa, the first kalpa (or cycle) ordained is this one called the Vārāha.

Here I tell you, O brāhmaṇa, how the adorable eternal framer of the worlds created all the universe moveable and immovable.

पाद्मावसानसमये निशासुप्तोत्थितः प्रभुः।
सत्त्वोद्भ्रिक्तस्तदा ब्रह्मा शून्यं लोकमवैक्षत॥ ३॥

At the dissolution which followed the Pādma¹ Mahā-kalpa, the lord Brahmā awoke after having slept through the night. Then with goodness predominating in him he gazed on the empty world. And here men utter this verse to Nārāyaṇa, who has Brahmā's own form, god of the universe, changeless in might. "Nara means water and bodies"²—we have thus heard it is a name for water; and in it he lies, hence he is called Nārāyaṇa.

On awaking he knew that the earth had disappeared within that water, and then became desirous through reflection to deliver³ the earth therefrom. He assumed as of old in the kalpas and other times, other bodies such as those of a fish, a tortoise and other animals, and likewise he took the body of a boar. The lord who is composed of the Vedas and sacrifices assumed a heavenly form composed of the Vedas and sacrifices, and entered the water; he reached everywhere and existed everywhere. And the lord of the world raised the earth out of the lower regions, and set it free in the water, while the Siddhas who abode in Jana-loka bent their thoughts on him. The earth floated like an immense boat on that ocean, but does not sink by reason of the amplitude of its size.

Then he made the earth level and created the mountains on the earth. Formerly when creation was burnt up by the then world-destroying fire, those mountains on the earth were totally consumed by that fire. The rocks were engulfed in that one ocean, and the water was driven together by the wind; wherever they adhered and remained, there the mountains grew into being. Then he divided the earth, adorned with seven dvīpas; and he fashioned the four worlds, the Bhūr-loka and the others, as before.

While he pondered on creation, as of old in the kalpas and other times, he next became manifested as devoid of intelligence, as enveloped in darkness. Darkness, folly, infatuation, gloominess, and blind consciousness—ignorance,¹ composed of these five, became manifested out of the Supreme Soul. Creation irrational became established in five ways while he was meditating. Externally and internally it was destitute of light,² its soul was concealed, it consisted of vegetation;³ and since vegetation is declared to be "primary,"⁴ hence this is indeed the Mukhya creation.

He considered that creation incapable of causation,⁵ and thought of creating another yet. While he was meditating on its creation, the animal world, in which the stream of life⁶ is horizontal,⁷ came next into existence. Since its activities are displayed horizontally, hence it⁸ is known as the "tiryak-srotas." Cattle and other quadrupeds are well-known as being of that kind; they are indeed characterized chiefly by ignorance and are unintelligent; and they stray in wrong courses, and in their ignorance are subservient to

He thought even that creation was incapable of causation, and while he meditated, another came into existence; now this, the third, was the group of beings in which the stream of life passed upwards;¹⁰ it was characterized chiefly by goodness. Those beings abound in pleasure and affection; they are uncircumscribed outwardly and inwardly; and possess light externally and internally; they originated from an upward stream of life. Now that third creation of the Supreme Being who was satisfied in soul thereat is known as the creation of the gods. When that creation came into being, Brahmā was pleased.

Then he meditated further on another creation which should be capable of causation and be the highest. While he meditated so, and meditated on truth, the group of beings in which the stream of life passes downwards,¹¹ and which is capable of causation,¹² next became manifest out of the Imperceptible. Since the streams of life in them moved downwards, hence they¹ are "arvāk-srotas," and they possess light² copiously; they are characterized chiefly by ignorance and passion. Hence they have abundance of suffering, and are continuously engaged in action; and they possess light externally and internally. They are mankind and are capable of causation

Anugraha³ was the fifth creation, it is disposed in four ways, by contrariety,⁴ and by perfection,⁵ by tranquillity,⁶ and by satisfaction⁷ likewise. The objects of this creation moreover have knowledge of the past and of the present.

The creation of the origins of the gross elements⁸ and the gross elements⁹ is called the sixth, they all possess comprehensiveness,¹⁰ and are prone to mutual division;¹¹ and the origins of the gross elements are to be known as both impulsive and devoid of propensities.

Now the creation of "mahat" is to be known as the first by Brahmā; and the second of the "tan-mātras" is called the creation of the "bhūtas;" and the third creation is that of the "vikāras,"¹² and it is perceptible by the senses. So was produced the creation from Prakṛti wherein Intelligence preceded. The "mukhya" creation was the fourth, the mukhya things are known as immoveable. The fifth was that called "tiryaḥ-srotas"¹³ and "tairyag-yonya." Next was the sixth creation, that of the "ūrdhva-srotas";¹⁴ it is known as the creation of the gods. Then the creation of the "arvāk-srotas" is the seventh; it is that of mankind. The eighth creation is "anugraha"; it is characterized by goodness and ignorance. These last fire creations are known as those which were evolved from the Vikāras,¹⁵ and the first three as those evolved from Prakṛti.¹⁶ The ninth creation was Prakṛta and also Vaikṛta; it is known as "Kaumāra."¹⁷ Thus these nine creations of the Prajāpati have been declared.

3 This is the Pratyaya-sarga or intellectual creation of the Sāṅkhya philosophy. But Śrīdhara explains it as an inferior creation of gods (deva-sarga), who are characterized by both goodness and ignorance. It is characterized by ignorance because it is nourished by the ignorance among immovable objects and the animal creation, it is characterized by goodness, because it harmonizes with and thrives upon the perfection and satisfaction among mankind and the gods, and it is called Anugraha, because it favours (anu-grahakā) the several natural dispositions of those objects

17 This is the creation of Nīla-lohita Rudra (see Chap 49) and of Sanat-kumāra and the other mind-born sons of Brahmā, the Kumāras. This creation is called prakṛta because Rudra sprang into existence by himself, as mentioned in that canto, verse 3. It is also called vaikṛta, because the Kumāras were created by Brahmā in the form he assumed of a vikāra (vikṛti-bhūta)

The Course of Creation

Mārkaṇḍeya relates how Brahmā created the Asuras, the gods, the piṭṛs and mankind, and the night and day and the two twilights—He mentions the times when those beings are powerful—He relates the creation of the Rākṣasas, Yakṣas, Serpents, Piśācas, and Gandharvas—Next of all beasts, birds and other animals—Then of various sacred hymns and metres—Then of the lightning, thunder, and other phenomena—And lastly Brahmā assigned all things their shapes, pursuits and names.

Creation is impregnated with the good and bad¹ actions of previous existence, O brāhmaṇa; and because of this well-known law² created beings, though they are destroyed in the dissolution, are not delivered, from the consequences of their actions.

The gods and other divine beings, and stationary things, and the four classes of mankind, O brāhmaṇa, were produced in his mind when Brahmā was engaged in creation.

Then being desirous of creating the four classes of beings, namely, the gods, the Asuras and the piṭṛs and mankind, he infused³ himself in the waters. The particle of darkness grew up in excess as the Prajāpati was rapt in meditation. First then out of his buttocks, as he was desirous of creating, were produced the Asuras. And then he cast aside that body which was composed of the particle of darkness; that body cast aside by him forthwith became Night.

Being desirous of creating, he assumed another body and experienced delight; then were produced from his mouth the Gods in whom goodness predominates. And the mighty lord of created beings abandoned that body also, and when cast aside it became Day wherein goodness predominates.

Then he took another body which was indeed characterized by the particle of goodness; the piṭṛs were produced from him while he deemed himself to be a piṭṛ. The lord, after creating the piṭṛs, abandoned that body also, and when abandoned it became the Twilight that intervenes between day and night Next the lord assumed another body characterized by the particle of passion, and then were produced Mankind who spring from the particle of passion. After creating mankind, the lord abandoned that body, and it became the Twilight that ends the night and begins the day.

Thus these bodies of the wise God of gods have become famed as the night and day, and the evening twilight and the morning twilight, O brāhmana Three are characterized by the particle of goodness, namely, the morning twilight, the evening twilight and the day, the night is characterized by the particle of darkness, hence it is called *Tri-yāmiḥ*¹ Hence the gods are powerful by day, but the Asuras by night, and mankind at the coming of the morning twilight, and the pits at the evening twilight At these times these classes of beings are undoubtedly powerful and unassailable by their foes, and when they light upon the adverse times they lose their power

Now after creating these four, the Prajāpati, feeling hunger and thirst, took another body composed of passion and darkness during the night, during its darkness the adorable unborn god created bearded monsters wasted with hunger, and they endeavoured to eat up that body Some of those monsters, who said "let us preserve² it from them, were called Rākṣasas in consequence, and those who said "let us devour³ it" were called Yaksas, from yaksana, 'eating,'⁴ O brāhmana

Whatever actions they were severally endowed with originally at their creation, those very actions they are endowed with when they are created again and again. Noxiousness and harmlessness, gentleness and cruelty, righteousness and unrighteousness, truth and falsehood—animated thereby they have their being; therefore they severally take delight in those characteristics. The lord, the creator, himself ordained diversity and specialization¹ among created things in their organs and pursuits and bodies. And he assigned the names and shapes of created things, and propounded the duties of the gods and other beings, even by the words of the Veda at the beginning. He gives names to the Ṛṣis, and to the several created classes² among the gods, and to

The Course of Creation

Mārkaṇḍeya describes the creation of the primeval human race, and their simple condition and happy life—When they ultimately died out, modern men fell from the sky, and lived in kalpa trees—Passionate affection sprung up among them—and covetousness next, which destroyed the trees, and drove them to form communities—Their measures of length are explained—and fortresses, towns, villages and houses described—The Tretā Age began—with the existing rivers and vegetation—and the people lived on the vegetation—They there took private possession of property according to might and the vegetation perished—Then they supplicated Brahmā, and he created all existing cereals and plants— The seventeen cereals and the fourteen sacrificial plants are specified—Brahmā ordained their means of livelihood which could be gained only through labour, and their laws, castes—The spheres assigned to various classes after death are mentioned.

You has told me, Sir, of the group of beings in which the stream of life¹ passes downwards; tell me fully, O brāhmaṇa, how Brahmā created the human creation, and how he created the classes of men, and how their qualities, O wise Sir; and tell me what business has been assigned to the brāhmaṇas and those other classes severally.

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

While Brahmā was first creating and was meditating on truth, he created a thousand pairs of human beings from his mouth, O Muni; when born, they come into being, characterized chiefly by goodness, and self-glorious. He created another thousand pairs from his breast; they were all characterized chiefly by passion, and were fiery and impatient. And he created again another thousand miserable pairs from his thighs;² they were known as characterized chiefly by passion and ignorance, and as enviously disposed. And he created another thousand pairs from his feet; they were all characterized chiefly by ignorance, and were unfortunate and little of understanding.

Then those living beings, produced in pairs, were rejoicing together; urged by their mutual distress they hastened to sexual intercourse. Thenceforward pairing originated in this kalpa. Women did not have their courses month by month; hence they did not then bring forth offspring, although they engaged in sexual intercourse. They bring forth just pairs of children once at the close of life. Thenceforward pairing originated in this kalpa. By meditation and thought those human beings give birth to offspring once. Sound and the other objects of sense were pure severally in their five marks.

This was this creation of the human race which the Prajāpati formerly produced. Sprung of his lineage they worshipped this world, and they pay homage to rivers, lakes, and seas and the mountains also. During that age those human beings lived indeed feeling little cold or heat. They received delight according to their natural dispositions from the objects of sense, O wise Sir; no opposition, nor enmity, nor envy existed

Time was always happy; there was neither heat nor cold in excess; as time passed by, they attained wonderful perfection. More-over they enjoyed satisfaction in the forenoon and at noon; and again satisfaction came without exertion to those who wished for it and exertion also sprang up in the mind of those who wished for it. The water was exquisite. Perfection was merry with many a delight for them;¹ and another was produced that conferred every wish. And with bodies uncared for, those human beings had lasting youth.

As the people died in the course of time, so their prosperity gradually perished everywhere; and when it had altogether perished, men fell down from the sky. Those kalpa trees were commonly produced which are called houses; and they brought forth every kind of enjoyment to those people. At the beginning of the Tretā age the people got their subsistence from those trees. Afterwards in the course of time passionate affection² sprung up suddenly among them.

were called houses¹ by them. But branches certainly fall from other trees, O brāhmaṇa; and they yield clothing and ornaments out of their fruits. In the separate cavities of the same fruit of those trees was produced very strong honey, which excelled in smell, colour and taste and which no bee had made; on that they subsisted at the beginning of the Tretā age.

Afterwards in course of time those people grew covetous besides; their minds being filled with selfishness they fenced the trees² round; and those trees perished by reason of that wrong conduct on their part. Strife sprang up in consequence; their faces felt cold and heat and hunger. Then for the sake of combination and resistance they made towns at first; and they resort to fortresses in inaccessible deserts and wastes, in mountains and caves; also they industriously constructed with their own fingers an artificial fort on trees, on mountains and in water, and they first made measures intended for measurement.

Now of the four kinds of fortresses three occur naturally; the fourth kind of fortress is artificial. Now those men constructed it laboriously;¹ and they also constructed, O brāhmaṇa,² the pura,³ and the khetaka, the droṇī-mukha⁴ likewise,⁵ and śākhā-nagarakas and the three kinds of kharvaṭakas,⁶ and the grāmas together with the arrangement of the ghoṣas,⁷ and the separate habitations therein; and they built lofty ramparts surrounded on all sides with fosses. They made the pura, or town, extend for a quarter of a yojana in every direction, and slope down to water on the east; they made it auspicious and peopled it with colonies from noble families.⁸ And with a half of it they laid out the khetā,⁹ and with a quarter of it the karvaṭa;¹⁰ and then the inferior portion which is made with the remaining quarter is called the droṇī-mukha.¹¹ A town destitute of ramparts and fosses¹² is called a kharvaṭa; and a śākhā-nagaraka¹³ is another kind of town which possesses ministers and feudatory princes. Moreover, a dwelling place¹⁴ which abounds with sūdras and water,¹⁵ where the cultivators are independently prosperous,¹⁶ and which is situated on land that can be used for fields, is called a grāma.¹⁷ The dwelling-place, which men make, different from cities and other abodes, for the sake of their business, is to be known as a vasati by modern men.¹⁸

1. The text tac ca kuryāt satastu te appears corrupt. A better reading is tac cakrur yatnatas tu te from a MS. in the Sanskrit College Library.
2. For dvijaḥ read dvija? The vocative seems preferable as Mārkaṇḍeya is relating what happened in a previous age, and the work described would not fall to a brāhmaṇa's duty. If dvijaḥ be retained, the word kuryāt must be understood.
3. This is explained in verse 44.
4. These two words are explained in verse 45.
5. For tadva read tadvad.
6. These two words are not in the dictionary; they are explained in verses 45 and 46. For karvaṭakam trayī read karvaṭaka-trayīm? Bombay edition read kharvaṭaka dramī.
7. Sanghoṣa is not in the dictionary. For gramā-sanghoṣa-vinyāsam read grāmam sa-ghoṣa-vinyāsam? Grāma is explained in verse 47, and ghoṣa in verse 50.
8. Suddha-vamśa-vahirgamam.
9. Prof. Sir M. Monier-Williams explains khetā, "a village, the residence of peasants and farmers; a small town, half a pura"; but here it apparently means a particular portion of the pura; does it mean the "inhabited or residential area"?
10. This word is said to mean "a village, market-town, the capital of a district," but here it denotes a particular portion of the pura; does it mean the bazār or the "area occupied with the market and shops"?
11. This word said to mean "the capital of a district, the chief of 400 villages," but here it evidently refers to the lowest part of the pura; does it mean the "area inhabited by the labouring population or the lowest classes"?

12. For prākāram parikhā-hīnam read prākāra-parikhā-hīnam? Or, is the verse intended to say that a town surrounded with a rampart but without a fosse is a varma-vat? This would agree better with the meaning of varma-vat. Prof. Sir M. Monier-Williams explains it as "an unfortified(?) town."
13. This word is said to mean, "a 'branch-town,' a suburb," but here it seems to mean a 'town with branches,' a "capital town" or "metropolis."
14. Vasati; see verse 48.
15. For sūdra-jana-prāyāḥ read sūdra-jana-prāyā?
16. For -kṣībalāḥ read -kṣībalā?
17. The village. The word thus denotes a local area, and includes both the dwellings and the fields. It seems to designate specially the large and prosperous villages.
18. The word is explained in the dictionary as "a dwelling-place, dwelling-house, abode, residence," but here it is explained to be a "mart," apparently either permanent or temporary. It corresponds to the modern (Persian) word ganj, or the vernacular word hdi (Sanskrit haṭṭa), in Bengal. The word vasati appears as basti in the modern vernaculars, and means in Bengal "the populated part of a village," and "the part of a town occupied by the common bamboo-built houses." The verse seems to indicate that the word vasati was either newly-coined, or had recently acquired (or the author wished it to acquire) a special meaning. The complete change from this meaning to that of the modern basti which rather excludes any notion of trade, is note-worthy.
19. Or akrimī. Those words are not in the dictionary. If we might read ā-kramī instead, the word would be rather appropriate.

6 The dictionary says this is a kind of gram with long stalks, but I cannot trace it out in Roxburgh

7 Paspalum scrobiculatum, the modern koda, Roxb P 93 He says "The seed is an article of diet with the Hindus, particularly with those who inhabit the mountains and most barren parts of the country, for it is in such countries only where it is cultivated, it being an unprofitable crop and not sown where others more beneficial will thrive I have eaten of the boiled grain and think it as palatable as rice"

8 This is said to be Panicum miliaceum which is already mentioned the word means fennel also, but that is inappropriate I do not find any other grain of this name and masūra,¹¹ the finest pulse,¹² and kulatthaka,¹³ ādhaka pulse,¹⁴ and chick-pea¹⁵ and hemp¹⁶ are known as the seven teen classes These are the olden kinds of cultivated plants

15 For canakā, read canakā' See note p 84

16 Śana For ganāh read sanāh, as in several MSS

17 The reckoning seems wrong, priyangu is the sixth and kulatthaka the seventh

18 See note p 165

19 Yattila is not in the dictionary For yattilā read jattilāh

20 Coix barbata, Roxb , p 649, it is a coarse grass and cattle do not eat it It is also said to mean Hedysarum lagopodioides, which is mentioned by Roxburgh (p 573), but of which I find no description in his work

21 Cyperus rotundus, Roxb , p 66, a common grass, the roots of which dried and powdered are used as a perfume

22 This has been mentioned in Chap 29, verse 11 and is described in the dictionary as "a kind of wild panic, a species of grain" I find that Carpopogon pruriens is assigned by Roxburgh to the Sanskrit word markatī (p 553) That is a common legume, but he says no use seems to be made of it, except that the hairs of the legumes are used as a vermifuge and are believed to be poisonous

23 This is not in the dictionary, and I do not know what it is traditionally known as the fourteen cultivated and wild plants for use in sacrifices. When these plants are abandoned,¹ they do not spring forth again.

Thereupon the adorable self-existent Brahmā devised means of livelihood for the advancement of those people and the perfection of the hands which results from work. Thenceforward plants were produced, which must ripen after ploughing. But when their livelihood was thoroughly ordained, the lord himself next established bounds for them according to justice and according to their qualities, also the laws of the castes and of the four periods of a brāhmana's life and of the worlds² with all their castes which duly maintain righteousness and wealth, O most righteous Muni

Prājāpatya³ is traditionally declared to be the sphere assigned after death to brāhmanas who perform the ceremonies. Aindra⁴ is the sphere of ksatriyas who flee not in battle. Māruta⁵ is the sphere of vaiśyas who observe their own proper laws. Gāndharva⁶ is the sphere of the various classes of sūdras who perform menial service. The sphere of those eighty-eight thousand rsis who live in perpetual chastity has been traditionally declared to be that of the inhabitants of Jupiter. The sphere of the Seven Rsis⁷ has been traditionally declared to be that of hermits. Prājāpatya⁸ is the sphere of householders, the abode of Brahmā is for those men who have abandoned all worldly concerns, the world of immortality is for yogis—such is the ordinance of the various spheres assigned after death.

The mandate to the Yakṣa Duṣṣaha.

Brahmā next created the nine Sages, Bhṛgu, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Angiras, Marīci, Dakṣa, Atri and Vasistha—and also Rudra, Sankalpa and Dharma—All these were all-wise and devoid of passions—Brahmā in anger created a being half male, half female, who at his order divided himself into many male and female beings.

Brahmā, then created the Manu Svāyambhuva and his wife Śata-rūpā—They had two sons Priyavrata and Uttāna-pāda, and also two daughters. Ruci married one daughter Rddhi and begat Yajña and Dakṣiṇā.

Dakṣa married the other daughter Praśuti and begot 24 daughters, whose names are mentioned, and who became Dharma's wives, and also 11 other daughters whose names are mentioned, and who became the wives of the other sages and of Agni and the Pitrs—The children of these daughters are mentioned.

A-dharma and his offspring are mentioned, Naraka, Bhaya, Mrtyu—The actions of Mrtyu's sons are explained—Chief among them is 7 The constellation of Ursa Major.

8 See verse 77.

Duhsaha—to him Brahmā assigned a dwelling and raiment, a long catalogue of bad deeds as nourishment, and certain places and times for his success, but excluded a list of other persons and places from his influence

Then while he was meditating, mankind were begotten in his mind, together with their occupations, and implements which were produced from his body Spirits in bodily form¹ were produced from the limbs of him, the wise god All those whom I have already mentioned came into existence All created beings from the gods down to those whose condition is stationary are known to be subject to the three qualities² such was the constitution of created things, immoveable and moveable

When all that offspring of him, the wise one, did not increase, he created other mind-born sons like to himself, viz, Bhrgu, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, and Angiras, Marīci, Daksa, and Atri, and the mind-born Vasistha³—these were the nine sons of Brahmā, they are positively mentioned in the Purānas

Next the lord Brahmā became the guardian of his offspring by creating the first Manu Svāyambhuva,¹ begotten from and like to himself, O brāhmana,² and the woman Śatarūpā, who was cleansed from blemishes through austerities. The divine and mighty Manu Svāyambhuva took her for his wife. And through him her husband Śatarūpā brought forth two sons, Priya-vrata and Uttāna-pāda, famed through their own actions, and two daughters also, Rddhi and Prasūti. Then their father gave Prasūti in marriage to Daksa and Rddhi to Ruci³ of yore. The Prajāpati Ruci took his wife, and from them both a son Yajña was born and a daughter Dakṣiṇā,⁴ O illustrious Sir, these two then became husband and wife, and Yajña begat of Dakṣiṇā twelve sons, the glorious sons of Yajña and Dakṣiṇā were the gods well known as the Yamas in the epoch of Manu Svāyambhuva.

And with these two females the two sons formed two married pairs; and of those two, Māyā gave birth to Mrtyu (Death) who carries created beings away and Vedanā gave birth by Raurava² to her son Duhkha (Misery). And Vyādhi (Sickness), Jarā (Old age), Śoka (Grief), Tṛṣṇā (Thirst) and Krodha (Anger) were begotten by Mrtyu; or all these, who have the characteristics of A-dharma, are traditionally declared to have sprung from Duhkha. No wife have they, nor son; they all live in perpetual chastity.

Abandon the house of him, who eats only properly cooked food according to rule, who is pure within and without, who is free from covetousness, who governs his wife.¹ Abandon that house. O goblin, where the gods and the pitṛis are worshipped with their respective oblations, and where the female relatives and guests are honoured. And abandon that house also, where concord² dwells at home among the children, the aged, the women and men, and among the various classes of kinsmen. Abandon that house, O goblin, where the womenfolk are delighted, are not eager to go outside, and are always modest. Abandon that house, O goblin, at my command, where the bedding and viands are suited to the ages and relations of the inmates. Abandon that house, O goblin, where the inmates are always kind, and busied in good deeds, and possess the common household utensils. And you must also ever abandon that house, O goblin, where the inmates do not keep their seats while the religious preceptors, the aged, and dvijas are standing and where they do not stand. That will not be an excellent abode for you, where the house-door is not penetrated by trees, shrubs or other vegetation, nor by a man who pierces one's vitals. Abandon the house of the man who supports the gods, the pitṛis, mankind and guests with the remnants of his food. Abandon, O goblin, such men as these, the true in word, the forbearing in disposition, the harmless, and those free from remorse, and also the unenvious. Abandon the woman, who is devoted to her husband's service, who keeps aloof from associating with bad women, and who feeds on the food which has been left by her family and husband. Abandon the brāhman dvija always, whose mind is engrossed with sacrifice, study, discipline and alms-giving, and who has made his livelihood by means of the performance of sacrifices, teaching, and receiving alms.³ And abandon, O Duṣṣaha, the kṣatriya who is always energetic in alms-giving, study, and sacrifice, and who earns his livelihood from good taxes and by the occupation of arms. Abandon the stainless vaiśya, who is endowed with the three previous virtues,⁴ and who gains his livelihood from the keeping of cattle and trade and cultivation. Abandon also the śūdra, who is diligent in alms-giving, sacrifice and the service of dvijas, and who supports himself by menial service under brāhmaṇas and other dvijas, O goblin.

When a house is smeared over in the evenings, and thoroughly sprinkled with water, and the bali of flowers is made in it, you cannot gaze thereat, O goblin. CHAPTER 48

The Offspring of Duhsaha

Duhsaha had eight sons and eight daughters—their names are mentioned—The evil functions of the several sons and daughters are described, and the remedies against them—Their offspring are mentioned, and their evil actions described.

These beings are almost all personifications of physical injuries, moral vices and social offences.

Duhsaha had a wife named Nirmārṣṭi,⁵ now she was begotten in Kali's wife when she saw a candāla at the time of her menstruation. They had sixteen children, who pervade the world, eight sons and eight daughters, all very terrible

Dantākṛṣṭi and Ukṭi and Parivarta the next, Anga-dhrsh and Śakumī and Ganda-prānta-rati, Garbha-han and the last Sasya-īan were their male children. And they had eight daughters besides, hear their names from me The first was Niyojikā and the second Virodhinī and Svayam-hāra-karī, Bhrāmaṇī, Rtu-hārikā and two other very terrible daughters Smṛti-harā and Vīja-harā; and the eighth daughter was named Vidveshaṇī who causes terror to mankind.

अष्टानां च कुमाराणां श्रूयतां द्विजसत्तम॥७॥

I will describe what the several functions of the eight sons are and what are the remedies against the evils which they work; hearken to me, O brāhmaṇa.

Dantakṛṣṭi¹ taking his station in the teeth of newly born children produces intense wind,² with the desire of effecting an attack from Duḥsaha. The remedy against him is to be applied by men by means of white mustard cast upon the bed and upon the teeth of the sleeping child; and by bathing it with medicinal herbs of great splendour, by reciting good scriptures,³ and by supporting⁴ it on a camel, a thorn, a sword, a bone or a linen cloth.

Now the second son assigns good and bad fortune to men. while he says repeatedly, "let it be so!"; hence he is called Ukti,⁵ and that is his precise function. Hence wise men must always say, "May fate be auspicious!" And when anything bad is heard or spoken, let praise be offered to Śiva and to Brahmā, the spiritual preceptor of all that exists both moveable and immoveable and to each person's own particular family-deity.

The son who finds delight in always interchanging the foetus between one womb and another, and in interchanging the words in the mouth of a speaker, is called Parivartaka;⁶ a wise man should preserve himself against him by means of white mustard and the prayers and spells that destroy Rākṣasas.

Another son Śakuni⁸ stationed on a crow or some other bird announces weal or woe by means of food or birds.⁹ With regard thereto, however, the Prajāpati has said, "In an evil matter delay and the abandonment of the undertaking are best; in a good matter one should act very speedily."

6. The Interchanger.
7. Aṅga-dhṛṣh, the Assailer of the body.
8. Śakuni, a Bird (in general). The word kuśa alaiḥ in the text is not supported by the MSS. And seems wrong. They read Śakuniḥ (which I have adopted) or śakunam, "an omen".
9. Khaḡa-tas, this seems the best meaning; but it might also be read kha-gatas as an adjective to Śakuniḥ.

अवज्ञया जन्मश्च प्रशमं याति गण्डवान्।

Another son¹ stationed in the borders of the cheeks for half a muhūrta, O brāhmaṇa, consumes every undertaking, and eulogium and sincerity. By addresses to brāhmaṇas, by praise to the gods, and by extracting roots, O brāhmaṇa, by ablutions with cows' urine and mustard seed, so also by worship paid to the constellations and planets, and also by the observance of righteousness and the Upaniṣads, by repeatedly looking at weapons, and by contempt for birth Gaṇḍa-prānta-rati succumbs.

Another most terrible son,² moreover, destroys the fruit of pregnant women. Women should always secure protection against him by constant personal purification, by writing out famous spells, by wearing auspicious garlands and other decorations, by dwelling in well-cleaned houses, and by abstaining from over-exertion, O brāhmaṇa.

The other son Sasya-han³ moreover is he who destroys the growth of the crops. Against him indeed one should secure protection by wearing worn-out shoes, and by walking on the left side, and by causing a caṇḍāla to enter the field, and by offering the bali outside, and by eulogizing the soma juice.

And Niyojikā⁴ is the daughter who incites some men to seize and otherwise molest other men's wives and other men's goods. Immunity from her comes by reciting purifying prayers, by refraining from anger, covetousness and other passions, and by resistance with the thought 'She is inciting me to these acts.' When one is railed against or beaten by another, one should wisely think 'she is inciting him,' and should not fall into subjection to her. In this mundane existence, where there are other men's wives and other alluring objects, the wise man should consider, 'She is inciting my mind and my soul here.'

And the next daughter who causes opposition between a loving married couple, among relatives and friends, between parents and children, and among fellow-caste-people⁵—she is Virodhiṇī.⁶ One should secure protection from her by offering the bali, by enduring outrageous language, and by observing the śāstras and Virtuous Custom.

She takes the remains of food from men and also their food. She is rightly named Svayam-hārikā, for she is perpetually taking things away, O brāhmaṇa. For the sake of protection against her one should make a pair of peacocks and an artificial woman; and prophylactic marks⁴ should be drawn⁵ on the house, and allowing the house to be littered with fragments of food⁶ should be avoided and vessels in which milk and other things have been kept should certainly be cleaned with the ashes of the incense offered to the gods in the sacrificial fire. All that is well-known to be a preservative.

Another daughter robs women of their monthly courses, when they have begun and before they have begun;⁸ she is known as Ṛtu-hārikā,⁹ the daughter of Duṣṣaha. One should cause one's women-folk to bathe at places of pilgrimage, at temples, beside sacred public objects,¹⁰ on mountain tops, at the confluence of rivers, and in excavated places in order to subdue her. And one who knows the spells and knows the principles of action should cause them to bathe at the four changes of the moon and at dawn,¹¹ O brāhmaṇa;

1. For pari-viśyamāṇaṁ read pari-viśyamāṇaṁ. This half-line has nine syllables by poetic license.

2. The MSS. Read dur-dharā instead of the text dur-harā. I have adopted the former; the latter might mean "a confirmed thief."

One dwells in men's and women's tongues and utters falsehood as truth; he is called Codaka; he works calumny in the house. And another who acts with care dwells in the ears and is exceedingly evil-minded; he takes hold of people's words; so he is called Grāhaka. The third is he who, with evil mind, attacks men's minds and enveloping them with darkness arouses anger; so he is called Tamaḥ-pracchadaka.

From his son's sons were born the Likas⁵ in hundreds and thousands and eight tribes of Caṇḍālas, very terrible with staves and nooses. Then the Likas and those tribes of Caṇḍālas were possessed by hunger and ran at one another, desirous of eating one another. Hated by mother, by brother, by beloved friends, by kinsmen, by strangers, a man perishes from righteousness or wealth. Now one son, working sin, divulges⁸ men's peculiar qualities in the world; and the second plucks away⁹ one's good qualities and the friendship that exists among people. All these are the offspring of Duḥsaha, in the pedigree of that goblin;¹⁰ they are notorious as observers of wicked customs; it is they who have over-spread the whole world.

Then replied he to the lord of the world. "You are named 'Rudra,'¹ O divine one; cry not, assume some fortitude," thus was he addressed. Then he cried seven times more, and the Lord gave him seven other names and stations for these eight personalities and wives and sons, O brāhmaṇa. The Lord, the forefather, called him Bhava, Sarva and Īśāna and Paśupati, Bhīma, Ugra and Mahādeva. He gave these names and assigned

And there were born to him gradually Cara and Śukra, Lohitānga, Manojava, Skanda and Sarga, Santāna and Budha successively.

The Story of the Svāyambhuva Manvantara

Mārkaṇḍeya, states the duration of the Manvantaras, and mentions the names of the Manus past, present and future—He mentions the descendants of Manu Svāyambhuva and his son Priya-vrata, and explains how the whole world with its seven continents was peopled by them and divided among them—Jambu-dvīpa was assigned to Priya-vrata's son Agnīdhra, and was portioned out among Agnīdhra's sons—His eldest son Nābhī begot Rsabha, and Rsabha begot Bharata, to whom India was assigned of its entire constitution, hearken thereto. The dvīpas which I have mentioned to you, began with Jambu-dvīpa and ended with Puṣkara-dvīpa, O illustrious brāhmaṇa; listen further to their dimensions. Now each dvīpa is twice the size of the dvīpa which precedes it in this order, Jambu, and Plakṣa, Śālmala, Kuśa, Krauñca and Śāka, and the Puṣkara-dvīpa. They are completely surrounded by oceans of salt water, sugar-cane juice, wine, ghee, curdled milk, and milk, which increase double and double, compared with each preceding one.

In the five continents, which begin with Plakṣa-dvīpa and end with Śāka-dvīpa, righteousness also must be known as arising from the divisions of the castes and the several stages of a brāhmaṇa's life.

I will tell you of the constitution of Jambu-dvīpa; hearken to me. It is a hundred thousand yojanas in breadth and length, it being of a circular shape.¹ Himavat, and Hema-kūṭa, Niṣadha,² and Meru, Nīla, Śveta and Śṛṅgin are the seven great mountain-systems³ in it. Two of these great mountain-ranges⁴ are a hundred thousand yojanas in extent and are situated in the middle of Jambu-dvīpa; there are two more mountain-ranges which are south of those two and two more which are north. They are severally less by ten and ten thousand yojanas in length;⁵ they

1. Vṛttan. This distance cannot apply to the circumference (vṛtti) as well. the circumference, length and breadth cannot all be the same.
2. The text reads Rṣabha, which disagrees with other Purāṇas and verses and 23.
3. Varṣa-parvata.
4. Niṣadha on the south of Meru and Nīla on the north, according to the Viṣṇu-Purāṇa, Bk. II, ch. ii.
5. The text of the first line of verse 11 seems wrong : read instead, as in th? MS.—Daśābhir daśābhir nyūnāḥ sahasraḥ sahasraḥ to parasparam. Hema-kūṭa (south of Niṣadha) are all two thousands yojanas in height and they have the same breadth. And six of the mountain-ranges in it extend into the sea. The earth is low on the south and north, it is highly elevated in the middle.

ततः पूर्वेण भद्राश्वं केतुमालं च पश्चिमे।
इलावृतस्तय मध्ये तु मेरुः कनकपर्वतः॥१४॥

On the southern half of the elevated ground⁶ are three countries, and on the north are three. Ilāvṛta is situated between those halves and is shaped like the half-moon. East of it is Bhadrāśva and west in Ketumāla.⁷

Now in the middle of Ilāvṛta is Meru, the mountain of gold. The height of that immense mountain is eighty-four⁸ thousand yojanas; it penetrates downwards sixteen thousand yojanas, and it is just sixteen thousand yojanas broad; and since it is fashioned like a cup,⁹ it is thirty-two thousand yojanas broad at the summit. It is white, yellow; black and red on the east and other sides consecutively; and a brāhmaṇa, a vaiśya, a śūdra and Śveta (north of Nīla) are 90,000 yojanas long. Himavat (south of Hema-kūṭa) and Śṛṅgin (north of Śveta) are 80,000 yojanas long. The decrease is due to their position in the circle of the earth. See Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Bk. II., ch. ii.

and a kṣatriya are stationed there according to the castes. Moreover, upon it on the east and the seven other directions of the sky consecutively¹ are the Courts of Indra and the other Loka-pālas; and in the centre is Brahmā's Court, which is fourteen thousand yojanas high.

Moreover below it are the subjacent hills² with a height of ten thousand yojanas. On the east and other sides consecutively are the mountains Mandara, Gandhamādana and Vipula and Supārśva;³ they are decorated with trees as standards. The kadam tree⁴ is the standard on Mandara, the jambu tree⁵ on Gandha-mādana and the aśvattha tree⁶ on Vipula and the great banyan⁷ on Supārśva. These mountains are eleven hundred yojanas in extent. Jaṭhara and Devakūṭa are two mountains on the east side; they struck up to Nīla and Niṣadha without any space intervening between them. Niṣadha⁸ and Pāripātra are on the west side of Meru; these two mountains, like the two former, extend to Nīla and Niṣadha. Kailāsa and Himavat are two great mountains on the south; they stretch east and west; they extend into the ocean. Śrīgāvata and Jārudhi, moreover, are two mountains on the north; they, like the two on the south, extend into the ocean.⁹ These eight are called the boundary mountains, O brāhmaṇa. Himavat, Hemakūṭa and the other mountains comprise, one with another, nine thousand yojanas, eastward, westward, southward and northward. Similarly Meru stretches to the four quarters in the middle in Ilāvṛta.

From their juice springs the famous Jambū river, in which is found the gold called Jāmbū-nada. That river passes around Meru and then enters Jambū-mūla. O brāhmaṇa; and those people drink of it.

In Bhadrāśva Viṣṇu is figured with a horse's head; in Bhārata¹ he has the shape of a tortoise; and he is like a boar in Ketu-māla; and he has a fish's form in the north. CHAPTER 52

The Geography of Jambu-dvīpa

Mārkaṇḍeya mentions the forests and lakes and mountains around Meru—All the heavenly beings dwell in that region where there is the most charming scenery—Bhārata alone is the land of action, which entails merit and sin.

Hear from me of the four forests and lakes which exist on Mandara and the three other mountains,² O brāhmaṇa. On the east is the forest named Caitra-ratha, on the southern mountain the forest Nandana, on the western mountain the forest Vaibhrāja, and on the northern mountain the forest Sāvitra. On the east is the lake Aruṇode,³ and on the south Mānasa, on the west of Meru is Śītoda and Mahā-bhadra on the north.

The valleys among these mountains are exceedingly charming; they are decorated with forests and lakes of the clearest water. In them men are born who practise meritorious deeds, O brāhmaṇa. These are terrestrial Svargas, O brāhmaṇa; they surpass Svarga with their excellencies. In them no fresh merit or sin accrues. Even the gods are said to enjoy merit in them. And on these mountains, Śitānta² and the rest, O brāhmaṇa, are the great and resplendent abodes of the Vidyādhara, the Yakṣas, the Kinnaras, the Nāgas and the Rākṣasas and the gods and the Gandharvas, which possess great merit and are studded with charming groves which the gods frequent. And the lakes are charming; the breeze is pleasant at every season. Nor anywhere on these mountains do men have any kind of mental agitation.

The country named Bhārata, which I have told you of on the south, is the land of action; nowhere else is merit and sin acquired; this must be known to be the chief country, wherein everything is fixedly established.³ And from it a man gains Svarga and final emancipation from existence or the human world and hell or yet again the brute-condition, O brāhmaṇa.

The Descent of the Ganges

Mārkaṇḍeya describes the course of the River Ganges from the moon on to mount Meru, then in four streams flowing east, south, west and north, of which the southern stream was allowed by Śiva to flow through India at the entreaties of King Bhagīratha.

He describes briefly the happy condition of all the other countries (except India) in Jambu-dvīpa.

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

The foot of Nārāyaṇa, moreover who is the origin of the universe,¹ supports the earth. The divine river Ganges which issued thence flows in the three courses. She enters the moon, which is the womb of the nectar and the receptacle of the waters and thence, having purified with her contact the rays of the sun² which is indissolubly connected with the moon, she fell on the summit of Meru and then divided into four streams. As she fell from the summit and the sides and the outer bounds of Meru, she turned around and finding no support fell scattering her waters widely. Dividing her waters equally at the foot of Mandara and the three other mountains, she fell, piling high the rocks broken off from their bases by her waters.

and thence to the mountain Śitānta⁶ and thence to the other mountains on the east in order. Descending to the earth in her course, she flowed from Bhadrāśva into the ocean.

Moreover the second stream called Alakānandā flowed south towards Gandha-mādana into the forest Nandana that delights the gods and that lies at the foot of Meru and over-flowed the lake Mānasa with great force and reached the delightful kingly mountain Śikhara⁷ and thence overflowed all the mountains which I have mentioned in order on the south and reached the lofty mountain Hima-at. There the bull-bannered Śiva held her and would not let her go. The lord was propitiated by king Bhagīratha with fasting and hymns and Śiva released her there. She entered the southern ocean in seven steams and in three streams on the east; inundating as a great river the south with the overflow from her stream, behind Bhagīratha's chariot.

Moreover the great river famed as Sva-rakṣu fell on Mount Vipula on the west side and went towards the forest¹ Vaibhṛāja; and thence the great river overflowing the lake Śītoda reached the mountain Svarakṣu² and thence she went to the mountain Tri-śikha;³ and thence falling on the summits of the other mountains on the west in order, she reached Ketumāla and entered the salt ocean.

Now she flowed on to mount su-pārśva also, which is at the foot of Meru; there she is famed as Somā. She flowed to the wood of Savitā.⁴ Overflowing⁵ it, she reached lake Mahābhadrā;⁶ and thence she passed as a great river to mount Śankha-kūṭa;⁷ and thence reaching in succession Vṛṣabha and the other mountains on the north and overflowing the Northern Kurus she entered the great ocean.

Thus I have appropriately described to you, O brāhmaṇa, this river, the Ganges and the countries according to their arrangement in Jambu-dvīpa. In Kimpuruṣa and all the other countries dwell people, who have almost unalloyed happiness, who are free from sickness and who are exempt from low and high diversities of condition. In each of the nine countries in it are seven mountain ranges.

And then in each country there are rivers flowing down from the mountains. In Kimpuruṣa and the seven other countries, O brāhmaṇa, waters bubble up from the ground; here in Bhārata we have rain. And in these eight countries⁸ men enjoy a perfection which comes from the trees, from the water, from their mental condition and from their actions.⁹ The tree-bestowed perfection is obtained from the trees that grant them every wish; the natural is well-known as that which springs from the natural disposition; and the local delight is that which is connected with the land itself; and the water given¹⁰ perfection comes from the meditation; and the perfection which comes from reverential service and the performance of other duties is denominated righteousness produced.¹¹

1. For sācalam read sā vanam? See chap. 52, verse 2.

2. There seems to be a confusion in the text between the names of the river and the mountain, which latter is called Su-rakṣa in chap. 52, verse 9; for Sva-rakṣu then read Su-rakṣam?

3. This name seems erroneous. See chap. 52, verse 9, where Śīrākṣa is mentioned as the second mountain. No mountain of the name Tri-śikha is mentioned in that and the following verses among the western mountains. The two should agree; compare Vṛṣabha in verse 18 and chap. 52, verse 12.

4. Sāvitra; see chap. 52, verse 2.

5. For pavayanti read plāvayanti.

6. See chap. 52, verse 3.

7. See chap. 52, verse 12.

8. For vaṣeṣhv read varṣeṣhv.

9. Karma-jā, this seems preferable to dharma-jā in verse 25.

10. For toyāthā read toyōthā.

11. Dhurma-jā; verse 23 reads karma-jā instead, which seems preferable.

And in these countries the ages do not exist, nor bodily nor mental sicknesses; nor is there any undertaking involving merit or demerit there, O brāhmaṇa.

CHAPTER 54

Mārkaṇḍeya mentions the nine divisions of Bhārata, one of which is India—He mentions the seven mountain ranges in India (exclusive of the Himālaya Mountains) and names twenty-two separate hills—He mentions the chief rivers in India, grouping them according to the mountain ranges out of which they rise—He mentions the chief peoples in India and on its borders, arranging them according to the main natural divisions of the country—and he concludes with general descriptive remarks and an encomium on India as the sole land of action.

Krauṣṭiki spoke

Adorable Sir! You has fully described this Jambu-dvīpa. Just as you has declared it, merit-producing action exists nowhere else, nor action that tends to sin, except in Bhārata, O illustrious Sir! And from this land both Svarga is attained and final emancipation from existence and the medium end also. Verily nowhere else on earth is action ordained for mortals. Therefore tell me, O brāhmaṇa, about this Bhārata in detail and what are its divisions and how many they are and what is its constitution accurately; it is the country¹ and what are the provinces and the mountains in it, O brāhmaṇa?

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

Hear from me the nine divisions of this country Bhārata; they must be known as extending to the ocean, but as being mutually inaccessible. They² are Indra-dvīpa, Kaṣerūmat,³ Tāmra-varṇa,⁴ Gabhasti-mat and Nāga-dvīpa, Saumya, Gāndharva⁵ and Vāruṇa; and this is the ninth dvīpa among them and it is surrounded by the sea.⁶ This dvīpa is a thousand yojana from south to north.⁷ At its east end are the

1. Varṣa.
2. This and the three following verses agree closely with the Kūrma Purāṇa canto xlvii, verses 22-25.
3. The dictionary gives the word as kaṣeru-mat; the Kūrma Purāṇa as kaṣeruk-mat (canto xlvii, verse 22), in preference. Another form is said to be Kasctu.
4. The Kūrma Purāṇa gives the word as tāmra-parṇa in preference (canto xlvii, verse 22). It is Ceylon.
5. Or, gandharvas, Kūrma Purāṇa, canto xlvii, verse 23.
6. This is understood to mean India, as the following verses show; see Wilson's Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Edn. Fitz Edward Hall, Book II, chap. lii, note on the similar passage. But this Purāṇa states clearly enough (see verse 59 below) that India is not surrounded by the sea, but bounded by it only on the east, south and west and only partially so on the east and west, for verse 8 places the Kirātas and Yavanas there respectively.
7. The yojana is defined in chap. 46, verse 40, to be about 40,000 feet; this length therefore is 7,576 miles.

Kirātas¹ and at the west the Yavanas² Within it dwell brāhmanas, ksatriyas, vaiśyas and sūdras, O brāhmana They accomplish their purification with the occupations of sacrifice, meditation, trade etc ; and they seek their mutual business through these occupations and they gain Svarga or final emancipation from existence, merit and sin then

The seven mountain ranges³ in it are Mahendra,⁴ Malaya,⁵ Sahya,⁶ Śukti-mat,⁷ the Rksa mountains,⁸ and

1 The Kirātas are the uncivilized tribes of the forests and mountains, here the word appears to denote all the races with the Burmese type of features along the eastern limits of India

2 The Greeks originally and afterwards the Mohammedans

3 For the notes in this Chap I have consulted, Wilson's Viṣṇu Purāna (Edn FitzEdward Hall), General Cunningham's Ancient Geography of India (1871), his Archaeological Survey of India Reports, besides other works and maps

4 "Mahendra is the chain of hills that extends from Orissa and the northern Circars to Gondwana, part of which near Ganjam is still called Mahendra Malai or hills of Mahindra" Wilson's Viṣṇu Purāna, Book II, chap II, note The rivers which flow from these hills are named in verses 28 and 29, but only a few of them have been identified This range then appears to be the portion of the Eastern Ghats between the Godāvaṛi and Mahānadi rivers and the hills in the south of Berar See, however, note on the Sukti-mat range on the next page

5 This is the southern portion of the Western Ghats Only four rivers are mentioned in verses 27 and 28 as rising in these hills and none of them appear to have been identified, but as the River Kaveri is said in verses 26 and 27 to rise in the Sahya mountains, the Malaya mountains can be only the portion of the Western Ghats from the Nilgiris to Cape Comorin

6 The Sahya mountains are the Northern portion of the Western Ghats, and, as appears from the rivers which rise in them (see verses 26 and 27), extend from the River Tapti down to the Nilgiris

7 This range is not definitely identified, nor the rivers which are said in verses 29 and 30 to rise in it

General Cunningham says the river Śuktimatī "derived its name from the Śuktimāl (sic) mountains, in which it had its source," asserts that the river must be the same as the Mahānadi, and infers that the Śukti-mat mountains must "correspond with the high range of mountains to the south of Schoa and Kanker, which gives rise to the Mahānadi, the Parni and the Seonath rivers, and which forms the boundary between Chattisgarh and the feudatory state of Bastar" (Arch Survey Reports, vol XVII, pp 24 and 69, and map at end) His premises seem to me unsafe, and his conclusion confounds the Śukti-mat range with the Mahendra range, and must be incorrect, for the latter range appears to be identified beyond doubt

Mr Beglar proposes to identify the R Śukti-mat with the Sakri (which is a tributary of the Ganges and flows northwards about 35 miles east of Gaya), to connect the river with the Śukti-mat range and apparently to identify the range with the hills in the north of the Hazaribagh district He proposes to strengthen this position by identifying the rivers Kiyul (another tributary of the Ganges, east of the Sakri) and Kaorhari (which I do not find, but which seems to be another small tributary) with the Rṣi-kulyā and Kumārī, which rise in the Śukti-mat mountains, see verses 29 and 30 (Arch Survey Reports, vol VIII, pp 124 and 125) But the Śukti-mat range and Śukti-matī river do not seem necessarily connected, neither this nor the Vāyu Purāna makes the river rise in the Śukti-mat range, (see verse 23), Sakri does not appear the natural equivalent for Śukti-matī, (there is besides another river Sakri, a tributary of the Seonath), nor Kiyul and Kaorhari of Rṣi-kulyā and Kumārī, Sakri corresponds better with Śakulī (see verse 23), and the hills in the north of the Hazaribagh district are not remarkable, and are rather the termination of the Vindhya range than a separate mountain system

The only mountains, which have not been appropriated to the Sanskrit names, are the Aravalli mountains and the southern portion of the Eastern Ghats, so that this range might be one of these two, and if the former are rightly included in the Pāripātra Range, (see note, next page) the Sukti-mat range might be the southern portion of the Eastern Ghats and the hills of Mysore If, however, the Śukti-mat range must be placed in Berar, the Mahendra range will be restricted to the Eastern Ghats.

8 These are said to be the mountains of Gondwana, see Wilson's Viṣṇu Purāna, Book II, chap II, note Judging from the rivers which are said in verses 21 to 25 to rise in the Vindhya and Rkṣa Ranges, it appears this range consists of the hills which form the water-shed between the Narbuda, Sonc and Mahānadi on one side and the Tapti and northern tributaries of the Godāvaṛi on the other side, that is, it comprises the Śātpura Hills and the hills extending through the middle of Berar and the south of Chuttia Nagpur nearly into West Bengal

Vindhya¹ and Pāripātra.² And there are other hills besides them in thousands, which are situated near them. Their summits are broad and lofty and are delightful and spacious; Kolāhala³ and Vaibhṛāja,⁴ Mandarā,⁵ the hill Durdura,⁶ Vāta-svana⁷ and

Vaidyutas,⁸ Maināka⁹ and Sva-rasa,¹⁰ Tunga-prastha,¹¹ Nāga-giri,¹² Rocana,¹³ the hill Pāṇḍara,¹⁴ the hill Puṣpa,¹⁵ Dur-jayanta,¹⁶ Raivata¹⁷ and Arbuda,¹⁸ Ṛṣyamūka¹⁹ and Gomaṁta,²⁰

1. For vindhuś read vindhyaś. This does not denote the whole of the modern Vindhya Range, but only the portion of it east of Bhopal, and also the water-shed hills which extend from it into Bihar, as will appear from a comparison of the rivers which rise in it according to verses 21—23.
2. Called also Pāriyātra. This is the western portion of the modern Vindhya Range, west of Bhopal, as appears from the rivers which rise in it according to verses 19 and 20. Prof. Wilson says (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Book II, chap. Iii, note) "the name, indeed, is still given to a range of mountains in Gujarat (see Colonel Tod's Map of Rajasthan)," and that may be considered an offshoot of the main range. If the Vāyu Purāṇa is right in reading Varṇāśā instead of Venṇā in verse 19, this range would also probably include the Aravalli mountains in Rajputana. If this be so, the configuration of this range, a curve around the west and south of Malwa, would suggest a derivation for both the names, viz., Pāripātra, from pari+pātra, "the mountains shaped like an enclosing receptacle," or "the mountains which form a protection around;" or Pāriyātra, from pari + yā, "the mountains which curve around." The name may thus still survive in the Pathar range, which lies between the rivers Chambal and Banās. (Arch. Survey Reports, vol. VI, p.1 and map; and vol. XIV, p.151.)
3. Mr. Beglar proposes to identify this hill with the Kawa Kol range, which is east of the river Sakri (a tributary of the Ganges about 35 miles east of Gaya); but there does not appear to be anything about the range agreeing with the description in the text. (Arch. Survey Reports, vol. VIII, pp. 123 to 125 and map at end).
4. This as a mountain is not mentioned in the dictionary and I do not find any such mountain. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Vaihāra instead (xlv 90), which is a synonym for a famous hill called Vaibhāra or Baibhāra, near Raja-grha and about 28 miles north-east of Gaya. (Cunningham's Anc. Geog. of India, vol. I, p.452, map and p.463; Arch. Survey Reports, vol. I, p.21 and plates III and XIV; vol. III, p.140).
5. Mandarā, the famous mountain, is situated about 35 miles, south of Bhāgalpur in Bihar (Arch. Survey Reports, vol. VIII, p.130).
6. I do not find this in the dictionary. There is a hill called Turturiya, which stands a little south of the junction of the R. Mahānadi with its tributary the Seonath and which was a place of pilgrimage. (Arch. Survey Reports, vol. VII, p.202; vol. XIII, pp. 146-152).
7. This as a mountain is not mentioned in the dictionary. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Pātandhama instead (xlv. 91). I do not find either. But Mr. Beglar found a hill Bathan or Bathani in South Bihar and mentions a hill called Banthawa or randhawa in Buddhist records. These names might be easy corruption's of Pātandhama. (Arch. Survey Reports, vol. VIII, p.46).
8. This as a mountain is not mentioned in the dictionary and I do not find it. Is it to be connected with Bajinath or Vaidya-nath, the famous place of pilgrimage, near the R. Karma-nāśā, south of Ghazipur? There does not seem, however, to be any prominent hill there. (Arch. Survey Reports, vol. VIII, p.137; and vol. XIX, p.27). Or, should the reading by Vipula? Vipula is a well-known hill near Raja-grha (Anc. Geog. of India, vol. I, p.452, map, and p.464; Arch. Survey Reports, vol. I, p.21 and plates III and XIV).
9. This appears to be the mountain in which the R. Sone takes its rise, the river being thence called Maināka-prabhā (Arch. Survey Reports, vol. VIII, p.124); but some placed it between the southern point of the Indian peninsula and Ceylon (Prof. Sir M. Monier-Williams' Dictionary), and in this connection see chap. 49, verse 13.
10. This as a mountain is not mentioned in the dictionary; and I do not find it. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Sasurasa or Susarasa instead (xlv. 90); I do not find any such hill.
11. I do not find this. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Gantu-prastha instead (xlv. 91), which seems a mistake.
12. I do not find this.
13. I do not find this.
14. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Pāṇḍura (xlv. 90); neither is mentioned in the dictionary as a mountain. Should we read Pāṇḍava instead? There are two hills now which are called Pāṇḍus hill or the Pāṇḍus' hill, one found by Mr. Carleyle north west of Bairāt (or Vairāṭa) in Alwar (Arch. Survey Reports, vol. VI, pp.95-101); and the other by Mr. Beglar north of Hatta and near the R. Ken in Bundelkhand, where pilgrimages are still made (id., vol. VII, p.56).
15. I do not find this.
16. I do not find this. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Uj-jayanta instead (xlv. 92), which Gen. Cunningham identifies with Girinar hill in the peninsula of Gujarat (Anc. Geog. vol. I, p.325). There are also the Ajanta hills, north east of Aurangabad (Arch. Survey Reports, vol. IX, p.121) which seem to be the same as the Ajayanti hill (Anc. Geog. of India, vol. I, p. 555).
17. This is near Dwaraka or Kuśa-sthalī, the capital of the country Ānarta in the peninsula of Gujarat; and the Girinar hill mentioned in the last preceding note is sometimes identified with this hill.
18. The modern Mount Abu, at the south end of the Aravalli range.
19. Ṛṣyamūka is in the Dekhan; but I do not find its exact site.
20. This appears to be the hill of Gwalior. Gen. Cunningham says it was originally called Gopācala and Gopagiri, Gopāhvaya and later Go-manta (Arch. Survey Report, vol. II, pp. 372, 373). The Vāyu Purāṇa mentions Go-dhana instead (xlv. 91), which suggests Go-varadhana, but Go-varadhana does not suit the metre. It is strange, however, so famous a hill should be omitted.

Kūta-śāla,¹ Krta-smara² and Śrī-parvta³ and Kora⁴ and other mountains in hundreds By them the people, both Mlecchas and Āryas, are mingled together according to their divisions

2 I do not find this Is this is to be connected with the Kāramār hill, in Gāndhāra? (Arch Survey Reports, vol II, pp 92 and 106 and map at p 87, vol XIX, p 126)

3 Mr Beglar in a list of firths where portions of Pārvatī's body are fabled to have fallen when she was destroyed at Dakṣa's sacrifice, mentions "Śrī Parvat, near the Karatoya river" This must be the river mentioned in verse 25, for I do not think there is any such hill near the other Karatoya in North East Bengal

4 The Vāyu Purāna reads Kāru or Ketu (xlv 92), none are mentioned as mountains in the dictionary There is a hill called Kolla in Mewat (Arch Survey Reports, vol XX, p 133)

5 The modern Sursooty, between the Jumna and Sutlej For a clear description, see Arch Survey Reports, vol II 214, and XIV Pp 87-90 and Plate XXVI

There can be little doubt that in ancient times it was a very much larger river than it is now, see an interesting paper in the Journal, Beng Asiat Socy 1886, Part II, p 340, but in later times it perished, as it does now, in the sands of the desert and Vinasana was the name of the place where it disappeared (M Bh, Vana Parva, lxxxii 5052-5, and Salya Parva xxxviii 2119-20) South and East of it was the Drśadvatī and between them lay the sacred region called Brahmāvarta (Manu II 17, 18) and Tri-piṣṭapa (M Bh Vana P lxxxiii 5074 and 7075) and also apparently Brahmakṣetra (ibid., 5076) The name Sarasvatī, however, was given to the seven rivers Suprabhā, Kāñcanākṣī, Viśālā, Manoramā, Oghavatī, Surcnu and Vimalodakā (id., Salya Parva xxxix 2188-2216)

6 The Indus As to its ancient course through Sindh, see Journal Beng Asiat Socy, 1886, Part II P 323

7 The river Chenab, in the Punjab It was also called the Asiknī, the Greek Akesines

8 Or "and anther Candra-bhāgā" There were two rivers of this name (M Bh Bhīṣma Parva ix 322 and 327), but I have found no data to identify the second

9 The river Sutlej, the Greek Hyphasis In ancient times this river probably did not join the Beas, as it does not, but pursued an independent course to the confines of Sindh It flowed South-West from where it issues from the Himalayas, into the channel called the Narwal and then along the dry bed called the Hakra or Ghaggar, at a distance of 30 to 50 miles south of and more or less parallel to, its present course See Journal, Beng Asiat Socy, 1886, Part II, p 332

10 The modern river Jhelam, in the Punjab, the Greek Hydaspes

11 The modern R Ravi, in the Punjab, the Greek Hydraotes

12 This does not appear to be known, though it is also mentioned by the Vāyu (xlv 95) and Kūrma Purāna (xlvii 27), both of which read Kuḥū As it is mentioned in conjunction with rivers in the Punjab, is it to be identified with the Kubhā (Rgveda x, 75 6), the Greek kopphen, the modern Kabul river? (Cunningham, Anc Geog of India, I 37)

13 The modern Goomti, which joins the Ganges on the left bank below Benares There was, however, another and older Gomatī (Rgveda x 75 6), which is probably the modern R Gomal, a western tributary of the Indus (Muir, Sansk Texts, II 357)

14 Gen Sir A Cunningham says this is a name of the Gomatī (Arch Survey Reports, I 315) The text is Gomatī Dhūta-pāpā ca, and the Vāyu (xlv 95), Kūrma (xlvii 27), Varāha (lxxxv) and Viṣnu Purānas all read the same The two words are also linked together in the Mahābhārata (Bhīṣma Parva ix 325), but not, I believe, in the Rāmāyana, where the Gomatī is generally called "crowded with cattle" Dhūta-pāpā then either means the Gomatī and the translation would be, "and the sin-cleansing Gomatī," or it denotes some tributary of that river

15 There were two rivers of this name, this one (see M Bh, Bhīṣma Parva ix 337) and another in the Dekhan (ibid., 322, Anuśās Parva clxv 7653 and Rāmāyana, Kiṣk K xli 13) This river is mentioned in various passages (M Bh, Vana P lxxxiv 8045-6, lxxxvii 8323, xcv 8513, Śānti P xxiii 668, Anuśās P xix 1408-11 and Hari-Vamśa xii 710) and from these it appears to have been a considerable river between the Gomatī and Ganges, in or near the territory of Ayodhyā and having its source well up in the Himālayas The only river which satisfies these conditions is the modern Rāmagaṅgā, which joins the Ganges on the left, near Kanauj, and this river therefore is probably the Bāhudā

16 Or, better, Drśadvatī, the famous river between the Sarasvatī and Jumna It was the southern and eastern boundary of Brahmāvarta (Manu II 17) For a full description, see Cunningham, Arch Surv Repts II 214, and XIV 87-90 and plate xxvi See also note under Sarasvatī in verse 16

17 Read Vipāsā for Viṣpasā It is the modern river Bias, in the Punjab, the Greek Hyphasis It is now a tributary of the Sutlej, but was probably altogether separate in older times, for the Sutlej then had an independent course considerably to the south-east

Devikā,¹ Ranksu,² Niścīrā³ and Gandakī⁴ and Kauśikā⁵ are the rivers⁶ which flow from the slopes of Himavat, O brāhmana

- 1 There are two Devikās, one in the Dekhan (Rāmāy Kīy K xli 13), and this river MBh., Bhīṣma P ix 324, Anuśās P xxv 1696-7, and Vana P cccxi 14229) From the second of these passages it appears that the northern Devikā was near Kashmir and it may probably be identified with the modern river Deeg, a tributary of the Ravi on its right bank. The Devikā, which is mentioned in Vana P lxxxii 5044-9, seems to be a lake and may be the same as Devikā Sundarikā hrada in Anuśās P xxv 707-8
- 2 I do not find any river of this name mentioned elsewhere. The Vāyu Purāna reads Ikṣu (xlv 96) and this occurs in the MBh (Bhīṣma P ix 324), but I have found no data to identify it. Probably, however, we should read Vakṣu or Vankṣu, which is the Oxus
- 3 This is not in the dictionary. The Vāyu Purāna gives the same name (xlv 96) as the Varāha reads Nivīrā (lxxxv), while other readings are Niścīrā, Nirvīrā and Micitā. The Nivīrā and two other rivers, the Nicitā and Nivārā, are mentioned in the Bhīṣma Parva list (ix 326, 328) and the Nirvīrā in MBh., Vana P lxxxiv 8116-9, but there appears to be nothing to identify them beyond that the Nirvīrā is connected with the Kauśikī (see note below) in the last passage in its context
- 4 The river Gandak, which flows into the Ganges on its north bank near Patna. It has shifted its course considerably, and formerly it flowed east of its present course, through the middle of the districts of Champaran, Muzaffarpur and Darbhanga
- 5 Or generally, Kauśikī, the modern Kosi, which flows into the Ganges on its north bank, through the district of Purnea. It has shifted its course very remarkably. Formerly it flowed east of its present position
- 6 Or, as the text may be read, "and the Apagā flow", There is a river called the Apagā in Kuruksetra (MBh Vana P lxxxiii, 6038-40, Cunningham's Arch Surv Repts, XIV 88 and plate xxvi). The Kūrma Purāna reads Lohini ceti instead (xlvii 28), and the Vāyu (xlv 96) and Varāha Purānas (lxxxv) mention the Lohita. The Lohita is the Brahmaputra, which till last century flowed round the south side of the Garo Hills and then southward through the districts of Maimansingh and Dacca. Lohini, though fem., no doubt means the same. The Vāyu Purāna reads Kauśikī ca tritīyā tu instead (xlv 96), which may mean the "third Kauśikī," for there seem to be three rivers of this name (see MBh., Vana P cccxi 14231), or may refer to a river Tritīyā which is mentioned in the MBh (Sabhā P ix 373), but I would suggest as preferable, Kauśikī Kuratoyā tu, or Kauśikī ca tri-srotās tu. The Kuratoyā is the modern Kuratoc in the Bogra District in North Bengal, and Trisrotas or Trih-srotasī (see MBh., Sabhā Parva ix 375) is, I believe, the ancient name of the modern Teesta, which is east of that, both now flow into the Brahmaputra, but the first formerly flowed into the delta, before the Ganges and Brahmaputra shifted their courses (Cunningham Arch Surv Repts, XV 127 and 13, and plates 1 And xxxiii. The Varāha Purāna adds the Ca'ṣu-matī (75), an unknown name

- 7 Or Veda-smṛtā. Both names are mentioned in the MBh., the former in Anuśās P clxv 7651 and the latter in Bhīṣma P ix 324, and the Veda-smṛti is also mentioned in the Bhāgavata P (V xix 17), but I have found nothing to identify it
- 8 Or Vedasini, or Vetasini. I have not met with these two names elsewhere, the Vedavati is mentioned in the MBh., (Bhīṣma P ix 324, Anuśās P clxv 7651), but there appears to be nothing to identify it
- 9 Or Vrataghi, as the Kūrma Purāna reads (xlvii 28). I have not met with either name elsewhere and the river is now known apparently
- 10 This is most probably the modern Kali Sindhu, a tributary of the river Chambal, though it may also be the Sindhu, which is a tributary of the Jumna, between the Chambal and Betwa. The former is the more probable, because it is a large river and rises well up in the Pāripātra range and suits the following incident better. This Sindhu was a river of much note and on it was a great tīrtha, where Agastya met Lopā-mudrā, daughter of the king of Vidarbha and she chose him for her husband (MBh., Vana P xcvi, xcvi and cxxx 10541). The name of this tīrtha may have been Sindhūtama, (id, lxxxii, 4082-4095, and Anuśās P clxv 7650), but if so, it must be distinguished from the great tīrtha Sindhūtama, which was on the Indus (Vana P lxxxii 5021)
- 11 This name is not in the dictionary, but it occurs several times and is a variation of Venā. There is a river of this name in the Dekhan (see verse 24 note to Venyā), and one in Western India (see verse 26 note to Venyā), but I have not met with any river of this name in North India. Both the Vāyu (xlv 97), and the Kūrma (xlvii 29) Purānas read Varnāsā instead, the Varāha reads Parnā instead (lxxxv) and the Kūrma offers Parnā and Parnāsā in a note, (loc cit). The Varnāsā or Parnāsā is the modern Banās, and there are two rivers of this name, one a tributary of the Chambal rising near Udypur (Cunningham, Arch Surv Repts VI, plate 1) and the other, a stream rising near Mt. Ābu and flowing into the Rann of Kachh, the former is the larger and is probably the river meant in the text. Cunningham writes the name Parnāsā (id VI 157) and Parnā-nāsā (id XV 132), but the latter form seems doubtful. Devāvīrdha is said to have married one of these rivers (Hari V xxxviii 1999 and 2004-10), probably the second
- 12 Or, Sānandini. The Vāyu (xlv 97) and Kūrma (xlvii 29) Purānas read Candanā instead and the latter proposes Bandhanā and Sābandhanā in a note. The Varāha reads Candanābhā nāśadācārā (lxxxv) for this and the next nīrā¹ and Mahī,² Pārā,³ Carmanvatī,⁴ Nūpī,⁵ Vidiśā⁶ and Vetravatī,⁷ Śīprā⁸ and Avantī⁹ also river, but not very intelligibly. None of these names appear to be identified.

1 The river "that is always filled with water." The inclusion of this name among the rivers that rise in the Pāripātra Mountains is strange yet the Kūrma Purāna places it in the same group (xlvi 29, note). I have met with no river Sadānīrā except that in North India. A river Sadānīrā mayā is mentioned in Bhīṣma P 1x 340, but there is nothing to identify it. The Vāyu Purāna reads Sātrā and Sadātrā instead (xlv 97), but I have not found these names elsewhere.

A few remarks may be offered about the Sadānīrā in North India. Sāyana says it is the Karatoyā, the modern Kurattee (see verse 18 note), but it is stated in the Śatapatha Brāhmana (I iv 1), that the Sadānīrā was the boundary between Kosala and Videha. It is therefore identified with the R Gandak. By Dr Eggeling (loc cit., note) and Muir (Sansk Texts, II 419-422). But the old stream of the Gandak flowed through the districts of Champaran, Muzaffarpur and Darbhanga, i.e., through the middle of the Videha country, and the Gandakī and Sadānīrā are mentioned as distinct the same as the Gandak and is more probably the modern Rapti, a tributary of the Sarayū and the midway position of the Rapti eminently satisfies the position of a boundary.

2 The river Mahī, which rises in Malwa and falls into the Bay of Cambay. The Vāyu Purāna has a variant, Mahatī (xlv 97) and the Varāha reads Rohī (lxxxv), both seem incorrect. The Mahitā mentioned in M Bh., Bhīṣma P 1x 328, appears to be this river.

3 Or Parā, according to the Vāyu Purāna (xlv 98). This is said to be the modern R Parbatī, which rises in Bhopal and falls into the Chambal (Cunningham, Arch Surv Repts II 308 and Rennell's Atlas of 1781).

4 For Carmanvatī, read Carmanvatī. The river Chambal, the largest tributary of the Jumna.

5 This is not in the dictionary. The Kūrma Purāna mentions the Surā and the Sūryā (xlvi 29), but I have found no other mention of them, and they do not appear to be known.

6 This must, no doubt, be connected with the town Vidiśā which was on the river Vetravatī (Megha D 1 25). The modern river Betwa (see next note). Vidiśā appears to be the modern town Bhīṣa. The river Vidiśā therefore was probably the small tributary which joins the Betwa on its left bank at Bhīṣa.

7 The modern river Betwa, which rises near Bhopal and flows into the Jumna. There was another river of this name in Western India (Harī V clxviii 9514 6). The Varāha Purāna reads Vedatrayī wrongly (lxxxv).

8 This is the river on which Ujjayīni, the modern Ujjain, stands (Megha D 1 31, 32). Another Śīprā is mentioned in verse 24.

9 This is not in the dictionary and I have not found it elsewhere. The Vāyu Purāna reads Avantī instead (xlv 98), which is preferable and would be the river of the Avantī country (see notes to verses 52 and 55, below). The river Avantī therefore is probably the river which are known¹⁰ as those connected with the Pāripātra mountains.

rises near Mhow and flows into the Chambal. The Varāha Purāna reads Vopantī (lxxxv) erroneously.

10 For smatāh, read smṛtāh.

11 The R Sone which rises near the source of the Narbada and flows into the Ganges above Patna. It was also called Hīranyabāhu and Hīranyavāha, the Greek Erannoboas. For changes in its course, see Cunning Arch Surv Repts, VIII 4-24.

12 Or, Mahānadi. It flows through Orissa into the Bay of Bengal. The main stream is now considered to be the river which rises near Kanker, but that cannot be the source meant in the text, for it would belong to quite a different water-shed. The Mahānada here must designate the branch now called the Hasdu or Hestho, which rises near the source of the Sone (Cunning Arch Surv Repts XVII Plate 1). The Varāha Purāna omits the Mahānadi altogether and reads Jyotīrathā instead (lxxxv). This river, which is also Jyotīrathā (M Bh., Vana P lxxxv 8150) and Jyotīrathā (Harī V clxviii 9510-12) is said to be a tributary of the Sona in the former passage, and is placed in the Dekhan in the latter. It is, therefore, probably the modern Johila, the southern of the two sources of the R Sone.

13 The modern Narbada or Nerbudda, which rises near the Sone and flows into the Gulf of Cambay.

14 This is not in the dictionary and I have not met the name elsewhere, it is a synonym of Jyotīrathā? (See last page, note). The Kūrma Purāna mentions the Su-rasā (xlvi 30) and so also the Varāha (lxxxv), instead of this and the next river the Vāyu Purāna reads Su-mahā-drumā or Surahādumā (xlv 990), but I have not met with any of these names elsewhere, except Su-rasā in the Bhāgavata P (V xix 17).

15 This is not in the dictionary, but is mentioned in M Bh., Anusās P clxv 7648. I have found nothing to identify it.

16 The R Mandakin, which flows near Mt Chitrakut into the river Paisunī, a tributary of the Jumna between the Ken and the Tons (Cunning Arch Surv Repts, XXI 11). Mr Beglar's proposal to identify it with the R Reur, a southern tributary of the Sone (Ibid XIII 42-54) depends upon his identification of Mt Citrakūṭa with Ramgarh hill in Chhattisgarh and is untenable (see Journal, R A S, April, 1894, page 240). The river Reur, or Rer, is also called Arand, and all these forms appear to point to Erandā as the original name.

Daśāinā¹ and Citrakūta² also, Citrotpalā³ and Tamasā,⁴ Karamoda,⁵ Pīśācīkā⁶ and Pippali-śronī⁷ also Vipāśā,⁸ the river Vañjulā,⁹ Sumerujā,¹⁰

- 1 The river of the country Daśāina, the modern R Dasān, between the Betwa and the Ken
- 2 This is not in the dictionary. It is no doubt to be connected with Mt Citrakūta, the modern Chitrakut (see Journal, R A S April, 1894, page 239) and is probably the stream which flows round the south and east of the modern Mt Chitrakut, past Karwī into the Jumna
- 3 This is not in the dictionary, but a Citrotpalā is mentioned in M Bh, Bhīṣma P ix 341. Cunningham says Citrotpalā is the name of the modern main-stream of the Mahānadī below its junction with the Parī (Arch Surv Repts, VII 155 and XVII 70), but that river as mentioned already (page 248, note) would belong to a different water-shed
- 4 Or Tamasā, as the Kūrma Purāna reads (xlvii 30). It is the river Tons which flows into the Ganges on the right bank below Allahabad
- 5 This is not in the dictionary and I have not found the name elsewhere. The Vāyu Purāna (xlv 100) and the Varāha (lxxxv) read Karatoyā instead. Should we read Karmanodā, as a synonym of Karmanāśā? The river meant is no doubt the modern Karamnasa, which flows into the Ganges on the right bank just above the Sonc
- 6 I have not met with this river elsewhere. Pīśāca was a name given to various races, chiefly barbarous hill tribes (Muir, Sansk Texts, II 59). In this place it would, no doubt, mean the tribes inhabiting Rewah and Chuta Nagpore and the Pīśācīkā is probably one of the southern tributaries of the Sonc, such as the Rer or Kanhar
- 7 Or Pippali-śronī as the Vāyu Purāna reads (xlv 100), or Pippalā, as the Varāha reads (lxxxv). I have not found any data to identify it, but have seen the name assigned to the modern river Paisuni or Parsaroni, a tributary of the Jumna between the Ken and the Tons (Arch Surv Repts XXI 11), and these words may well be corruptions of Pippali-śronī
- 8 This appears to be the river mentioned in M Bh, Anuśās P xxv 1733 and perhaps 1710-11 also. It is probably the modern Bias which flows past Sangor and joins the R Ken, a tributary on the right bank of the Jumna (Cunningham, Arch Surv Repts, XXI 157 and plate xxxiv). The Ken or Kiyān, as important streams, does not appear to be mentioned, it is said to be a corruption of Karnavattī (Ibid 156, and II 446), though Lassen gives Kāyana as its ancient form (Ind Alt, Map). Was Vipāśā the ancient name of this whole river? The Vipāśā in the Punjab is mentioned in verse 18. The Varāha Purāna reads Viśālā (lxxxv) and the rivers of this name and the river here meant is no doubt the Sarasvatī Viśālā at Gaya (M Bh, Śālyā P xxxix 2188-9 and 2205-6), probably the modern Lilajan which flows past Bodh Gaya
- 9 I have not found this name elsewhere. The Varāha Purāna reads Vañjukā (lxxxv), the Kūrma Mañjulā (xlvii 31) and the Vāyu Jambulā (xlv 100). Of these names I have met only with Mañjulā elsewhere (M Bh, Bhīṣma P ix 341), but with no data to identify it. The river meant is probably that on which Gaya stands, its eastern source is called the

- Mohana, its middle portion the Phalgu, and the eastern branch, into which it divides the Jumna
- 10 The Vāyu Purāna reads Siterajā (xlv 101) and the Varāha Virajā (lxxxv). I have not met with any of these names elsewhere, but the M Bh, mentions three rivers Virā (Bhīṣma P, ix 329), Viravatī (Ibid, 332) and Virankarā (Ibid, 333) which are all distinct. The Matsya Purāna reads two names instead, the Iśunī and Lajjā (cxiii 26), probably erroneous
- 11 This river has been much written about but does not seem to be identified safely yet. See p 285, note and also Cunningham, Arch Surv Repts, IX 55. It is mentioned in the Hari-vamśa (clxviii 9509-13) and is said there to be in the Dekhan, it seems to be meant by the name Muktimatī in M Bh, Bhīṣma P ix 342, and perhaps it is referred to in Hari-V xxxvii 1980-7. These passages, however, may allude to two rivers of this name. It was the river on which stood Śuktimatī, the capital of Cedi, see note to Cedi in chap 55, verse 16
- 12 The Vāyu Purāna reads Makru ā or Makṣanā (xlv 101) and the Varāha Pankinī (lxxxv), but I have not met with any of these names elsewhere. The Śakulī, however, may probably be identified with the R Sakri, which flows into the Ganges on the south, about half-way between Patna and Monghyr (Cunningham, Arch Surv Repts, VIII Plate 1, and XV Plate iv). There is also another Sakri which is a tributary of the river Sonath, a tributary of the Mahānadī (id XVII Plate i), but that rises rather in the Rsa Mts. The Bhīṣma P list mentions a river called Makarī (ix 331), and the Matsya Purāna reads Mukutā instead (cxiii 26)
- 13 The text Trīdivā-kramu seems wrong and I have adopted the reading of the Vāyu Purāna Trīdivā Kramāt, which is preferable. The word kramāt, if right, would indicate that the rivers are mentioned in regular order from west to east. The Trīdivā is also mentioned in the M Bh, (Bhīṣma P ix 324, and Anuśās P clxv 7654), but no data are given to identify it. It may be noticed there is a river called the Krumu (Rgveda, X 75 6), which is probably the modern R Kuram, a tributary of the Indus, south of the Kabul R (Muir's Sansk Texts, II 357), but it cannot be intended here. Another Trīdivā is mentioned in verse 28
- 14 This is not in the dictionary, but it occurs in M Bh, Sabhā P ix 371. The Vāyu (xlv 100) and Varāha (lxxxv) and Kūrma Purāna (xlvii 31) read Bālu-vāhinī instead and the last gives Ratna-vāhinī as a variant. I have not met with either of these names elsewhere
- 15 The Varāha Purāna adds another river Rātrī (lxxxv), but I have not met with it elsewhere
- 16 The text reads Skandha, which is clearly wrong. The Vāyu (xlv 101) Kūrma (xlvii 31) and Varāha Purāna (lxxxv) read Rkṣa. There is certainly some confusion in this group of rivers, for the Mandākinī, Daśarjā and Tamasā rise in the Vindhya water-shed, while the Soṇa, Mahānada and Narmadā rise rather in the Rkṣa Mts, but the rivers mentioned in verse 24 rise in the Rkṣa Mts, so that the proper reading here should no doubt be Vindhya. The

Agni Purāṇe says the Narmadā rise in the Vindhya Mts (cxviii 7) so that perhaps this river and also the Sonc and the Hasdu branch of the Mahānadi, which all rise close together near Amara-kantaka, may have been considered to belong to the Vindhya water-shed. There seems to have been some vagueness in this matter, for the Utkalas and (Dakṣiṇa) Kosalas are classed among the races who inhabited the Vindhya Mts, in verses 58 and 54.

- 1 One Śiprā has been mentioned already in verse 20 and the Hari-Vaṃsa says there is a Śiprā in the southern region (cixviii 9509). The Vāyu Purāna reads Madrā instead (xlv 102), and the Kūrma (xlvii 32) and Varāha (lxxxv) Sighrodā. I have not found either of these names elsewhere, but a river Śighrā is mentioned (M Bh, Bhīṣma P ix 336) and another called Śivā (ibid, 332). The Matsya Purāna reads Kṣiprā (cxiii 27).
- 2 The Payoṣṇī was in the southern region (M Bh, Vana P lxxxviii 8329-35), it was the river of Vidarbha (ibid cxx 10289-90) and was separated from the Narmadā by the Vaidūrya Mts (ibid cxxi 10306-7). It was the modern river Purna (the tributary of the Tapti) together with the lower part of the Tapti into which the Purna continues. A careful consideration of King Nala's remarks (ibid lx 2317-9) with a map will show that the view described could only have been obtained from a position on the Satpura Mts about longitude 75o, hence the Payoṣṇī visible from there could be only the lower part of the Tapti. Such was considered the main stream in old times, and it was a famous and sacred river. Gen Cunningham's proposal to identify the Payoṣṇī with the Pahoj, a tributary of the Jumna between the Sindh and Betwa, (Arch Surv Reports VII Plate xxii) is untenable as regards this famous river, but there were two rivers of this name (M Bh, Bhīṣma P ix 324 and 327) and the Pahoj may be the other Payoṣṇī. The Varāha Purāna reads Payollī (lxxxv), which seems a mistake.
- 3 Or Nirvindhya, or according to the Vāyu Purāna, Nirbandhya (xlv 102). One river Nirvindhya is mentioned in the Megha D (l 28 and 29, commentary) as lying between the R Vetravati (or Betwa) and Ujjayinī (Ujjain), and (if the Parā is rightly identified with the modern Parvati, see note to verse 20) must be the modern Parwan which is west of the Parvati, but that river rises in the Vindhya Range according to the Megha-Dūta and belongs to the Pāripātra water-shed according to verses 19 and 20 above, on either view it is out of place here. There was, however, another large river of this name in the Dekhan, for it is mentioned along with the Payoṣṇī, the Tāpī and the Godāvarī and its tributaries in the Bhāgavata- Purāna (V xix 17) and judged by its position there, it may be the Pen-ganga a tributary of the Warda.

- 4 See note to Payoṣṇī above. This is the upper part of the modern Tapti before it joins the Purna. This branch was hardly known in early times, it does not appear to be named in the Mahā-Bhārata or Rāmāyana, nor it is mentioned in the copious list in the Bhīṣma P (ix). The reason was, no doubt, it was hidden amid hills and forests.
- 5 Or Nidhadhā, as the Vāyu Purāna reads (xlv 102). I have not met with this name elsewhere, but it naturally suggests a connection with Niśadha, the realm of Nala. As regards Nisadha, see the note to verse 54 below. This river then may be one of the small tributaries of the Narmadā or Tapti, which rise in the middle part of the Satpura Range. The Kūrma Purāna reads Mahānadi instead (xlvii 32), which may mean the Mahānadi in Chhattisgarh and Orissa, but is unsatisfactory, as it has mentioned that river before (ibid, 30). The Matsya Purāna reads Rsabhā instead (cxiii 27), which I have not met elsewhere.
- 6 This form is not in the dictionary. The Vāyu Purāna reads Venvā (xlv 102), the Kūrma reads Vinnā and gives Venyā and Cintā as variants (xlvii 32). Cintā is no doubt an error. The other names are merely different forms of the same word. The river is called Venvā in the Hari V (clxviii 9509-10) and also in the M Bh, (Sabha P xxx 1118), but in the latter poem it is generally called Venā and this seems the proper term (Bhīṣma P ix 335, Anuśās P clxv 7648, Vana P lxxxviii 8328, clxxxix 1290 and lxxxv 8176-7, whether the same river is also meant in line 8175 is not clear). From the passage last cited it appears the Venā is the river which joins the Godāvarī and Varadā (the modern Warda), that is, the modern Wain-ganga and its continuation the Pranhita. The Varāha Purāna reads Vesnāpāśā (lxxxv) which seems a mistake. This river appears to be also called Suvēnā (M Bh, Vana P clxxxix 12909) in contra-distinction to the Kṛṣṇa-venā (ibid, and also in Vana P lxxxv 8180-1, Bhīṣma P ix 335 and Anuśās P clxv 7648, and Hari V clxviii 9509-11) which appears from the second passage to be a tributary of the Venā and which I have proposed to identify with the western tributary rising near Deoghar and Soni (Journal, R A S, 1894, p 244). Another river of this name is mentioned in verse 26 and a Venvā in verse 19.
- 7 This is no doubt the modern Bytarni, which flows through the north of Orissa, and if it is rightly classed here, the Rkṣa Range must include the hills which stretch along the south of Chuta Nagpore.
- 8 The Vāyu Purāna reads Sitibāhu (xlv 102), the Kūrma Balākā (xlvii 32) and the Varāha Vedipālā (lxxxv). None of these rivers are mentioned in the dictionary, but the name Sinībāhu is given. I have not found any of these names elsewhere, except Balākā in M Bh, Anuśās P xxv 1706-7, which may be a river, but appears from the context to be in Northern India. Perhaps the reading should be Śilāvati or Śilāvati, which seems to have been the ancient name of the modern river Selye, this after uniting with the Rūpnarain is the river on which Tamluk, the ancient Tāmra-liptaka (see verse 44 below), is situated, and which may well find mention here. Perhaps the name Balākā may be connected with the modern river Barākar, a tributary of the Damudā, these two combined form the largest river in Western Bengal and flow close to

Kumudvatī,¹ Karatoyā,² Mahāgaurī³ and Durgā⁴ and Antahsīrā,⁵ those rivers⁶ flow from the slopes of the Rkṣa⁷ mountains, have holy waters and are bright

Tamluk Tamluk was a famous port and it would be strange if the rivers near it were overlooked. The M Bh mentions a river Śatabalā (Bhīṣma P ix 328). The Matsya Purāna reads Viśvamālā instead (cxiii 37). I have not met either name elsewhere.

- 1 I have not met with this name elsewhere. It may be the Subarna-rekha or one of the small rivers in the north of Orissa or may we conjecture Damud-vatī, and identify it with the river Damudā in West Bengal? See the last note.
- 2 One river of this name in North Bengal has been mentioned in verse 18 note, and there was another of the same name in the north of India (M Bh, Anuśās P xxv 1699), neither can be meant here. I have not found any Karatoyā elsewhere, which rises in the Rkṣa range. The Vāyu Purāna reads Toyā instead (xlv 103) and so also the Varāha (lxxxv), but I have not found this name elsewhere. Perhaps the reading should be Karabhāca Karabhā or Karpisā is the name of a river on the confines of Utkala and Kalinga (Raghu V iv 38, commentary), but no details are given to identify it. The name Karpisā suggests identification with the modern Cossyc or Kansai (the chief river in the Midnapur district) which is said to be modified from Kamsavatī, but may well be a corruption of Karpisavatī.
- 3 This is also mentioned in M Bh, Bhīṣma P ix 341. It is no doubt a synonym of Brahmānī and Brāhmanī, all being names of Durgā, it would then be the modern R. Brahmānī in Orissa.
- 4 There are two rivers of this name mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 337 and 341) in the M Bh and the second is that intended here, as it is placed with the Mahagaurī, but I have not met with the name elsewhere. It may be a synonym of the small river Brāhmanī which flows through the Moorshedabad district into the right bank of the Bhāgīratī branch of the Ganges.
- 5 This is not in the dictionary. The Vāyu (xlv 103) and Kūrma (xlvii 33) Purānas read Antah-sīlā. The Varāha reads Antyāgirā (lxxxv), which is no doubt an intended synonym. I have not met with any of these name (V) where but Antrasila is mentioned (M Bh, Bhīṣma P ix 337). Antahsila seems to be the correct form, and if the name is description the river probably one of the northern tributaries of the Mahānadi, all of which are encompassed with hills. See however a people called Antar-giryas in verse 24 below.
- 6 The Varāha Purāna mentions also Manijālā Śubhā (lxxxv), I have not found the former name elsewhere, but the Śubhā is mentioned in the Hari-Vamśa (clxviii 9509-10) and a river Maningā is mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 342). There are no data to identify them, except that the passage in the Hari Vamśa places the Śubhā in the Dekhan.
- 7 The text reads Bindhya or Vindhya, and yet makes the next group of rivers also rise in the same range. The Vāyu (xlv 103) and Kūrma (xlvii 33) and Varāha (lxxxv) Purānas read the same, but the proper reading must be

तुङ्गभद्रा सुप्रयोगा वाह्या कावेर्यथापगा॥ २६ ॥

सहपादविनिष्क्रान्ता इत्येताः सरिदुत्तमाः।

The Godāvarī,⁸ Bhīma-rathā,⁹ Kṛsnā¹⁰ and another¹¹ Venyā,¹² Tunga-bhadra,¹³

- Rkṣa as the Visnu Purāna says (Bk II Chap III), for the Tāpī, Venyā and Vaitaranī certainly do not rise in the former mountains but in the latter. The Agni Purāna wrongly groups the Tāpī and Payosnī with the Godāvarī and other rivers as rising in the Sahya Mts.
- 8 The modern Godāvarī. This river was famous from the earliest times. Jana-sthāna, the scene of Rāmas first conflict with the Rākṣasas was the country on both its banks between its tributaries the Manjira and Pranhita (see Journal, R A S, 1894, p 247).
- 9 Or Bhīma-rathī as the Vāyu (xlv 104) and Varāha (lxxxv) Purānas read. Bhīma-rakṣī which the Kūrma gives (xlvii 34) seems incorrect. The former is the name as given in the M Bh (Vana P lxxxviii 8328, Bhīṣma P ix 327, and Anuśās P clxv 7653). This is the modern Bhīma, the tributary of the Kṛsnā, rising near Poona. The Varāha Purāna adds immediately Marathī (lxxxv), is it a mistaken repetition of the last three syllables of the preceding river? I have found no such river.
- 10 The modern Kistna. This river received very little notice in ancient times and was almost unknown compared with the Godāvarī and Kaverī. Besides its inclusion in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 340), it is doubtful if it is so mentioned in the M Bh, or Rāmāyana. It is omitted from the lengthy account of Sahadeva's conquests in the south (Sabhā P xxx) and the detailed pilgrimage itineraries (Vana P, Tīrtha yātrā P) and other geographical discourses. It does not occur in the story of Raghu's conquests even in the late poem, the Raghu-Vamśa. The reason seems to be that the country through which it flows was nearly all forest in ancient times.
- 11 For tathātārā of the text the Vāyu Purāna reads ca vañjūlā (xlv 104) and the Kūrma ca vasyata or ca vatsarī (xlvii 34). I have not found these names elsewhere. Perhaps we should read some name like Mañjūrā, as the large southern tributary of the Godāvarī is now called though its earliest name was apparently Mandākinī (Rāmāyana, Yuddha K. ex 38-39, Journal, R A S, 1894, p 250).
- 12 This form is not in the dictionary. The Varāha Purāna reads Venā (lxxxv), the Kūrma Venā or Varnā (xlvii 34), and the Vāyu Vainī (xlv 104)—a mere variation, the proper name no doubt being Venā. This is the third river of this name mentioned here, see verses 19 and 24. It is probably the same as the Vinā in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 328) and the Venā in the Bhāgavata Purāna (V xix 17). Is it to be identified with the R. Penner which is between the Kistna and Kaverī, though the Sanskrit name of the Penner is said to be Pinākā (Arch. Surv. of S. India, by R. Sewell, I 123 and 129)?
- 13 The modern Tumbhuda, the large southern tributary of the Kistna, consisting of the combined streams of the Tunga and Bhadra.

Suprayogā,¹ Vāhyā² and the river Kāveri,³ these noble rivers⁴ issue from the slopes of the Sahya⁵ mountains

- 1 This is not in the dictionary, but it is also mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 328) and in the Vana P (ccxx 14232) and was a large and known river. Though not apparently identified, it is probably one of the large western tributaries of the Kistna.
- 2 This is not in the dictionary, but the Varāha Purāna agrees (lxxxv) and the Matsya (cxiii 29). I have not found the name elsewhere and it does not appear to be identified. The Agr P reads Vāradā (cix 22), the large southern tributary of the Kistna called Varada or Vedavati.
- 3 The modern Cavery or Coleroon in south India. It was better known than the Kistna in ancient times. It is mentioned in the M Bh, (Vana P lxxxv 8164-5, clxxxix 12910, and Bhīṣma P ix 328) and Rāmāy (Kisk K xl 21 and 25). King Jahnu is said in the Hari-Vamśa to have married this river and made the Ganges his daughter (xxvii 1416-22, and xxxii 1757-61).
- 4 The Matsya (cxiii 29) and Varāha (lxxxv) Purānas add the Vañjulā, as to which see verse 26 note.
- 5 The text reads Bindhya or Vindhya here, after having read it already in verse 25, and offers Sahya as a variant in a note. The latter in manifestly the proper reading and agrees with the Kūrma (xlvii 34) and Vāyu (xlv 104) Purānas.
- 6 This is not in the dictionary. The Agni Purāna agrees with it (cxviii 8), the Kūrma reads Rtmālā (xlvii 35), the Varāha Śata-mālā (lxxxv) and the Bhāgavata Kata-mālā (V xix 17). It is to be identified with the Vedamali which flows out north of Cochin. The people of Kaccha or Cochin are mentioned in chap 55, verse 28.
- 7 This is mentioned as a place pilgrimage in the M Bh (Vana P lxxxviii 8340) and the Raghu V says (iv 49 and 50), that the vanquished Pāṇḍya kings gave Raghu the choicest pearls from the sea at the mouth of the R Tāmra-parṇī, where (the commentator adds, it is well known) pearls were produced. This river then was in the Pāṇḍya country and flowed into the G of Manaar. It is the modern Chittar, the river of Tinnevely (Arch Surv of S India, By R Sewell, I 303).
- 8 The Vāyu Purāna reads Puṣpajāti (xlv 105), the Kūrma Puṣavati (xlvii 35) and the Varāha Puṣpavati (lxxxv). I do not find any of these names elsewhere. A tirtha Puṣpavati is mentioned (M Bh, Vana P lxxxv 8154-5), but it was situated between Dakṣiṇa Kosala (Chhattisgarh) and Campā (Bhagalpur). A river Puṣaveṇī is mentioned (id Bhīṣma P ix 342), which is joined with a river Utpalāvati and therefore is probably the same as the river in the text. A Puṣpavāhīnī is mentioned as situated in the south in the Hari Vamśa (clxviii 9510-2).

And the Pitr-somā¹¹ and Rsi-kulyā,¹² Iksukā¹³ and Tridivā,¹⁴ Lāngūlinī¹⁵ and Vamśa-karā¹⁶ are known to spring from the Mahendra¹⁷ mountains

- 9 This is the same as the Utpalāvati mentioned in the last note (M Bh, Bhīṣma P ix 342) and the Utpalā (Hari V, clxviii 9510-2), and the Vāyu (xlv 105) and Kūrma (xlvii 35), Matsya (cxiii 30) and Varāha (lxxxv) Purānas read Utpalāvati.
- 10 There are only six noteworthy rivers rising in the Malaya Mts, viz, the Vaigai, Vaippar and Chittar on the east, the Amaravati (a tributary of the Kāveri) on the north and the Ponani and Peri or Veda-mali on the west. The Chittar is the Tāmra-parṇī, hence the three others named in the text must be found among the five remaining modern rivers.
- 11 Not in the dictionary. The Vāyu Purāna reads Tri-sāmā (xlv 106) and the Agni P also (cxviii 8), while the Varāha reads Triyāmā (lxxxv). I have met only with the Trisāmā elsewhere (Bhāgavata Purāna, V xix 17). It is probably one of the small rivers on the Eastern coast, for the interior behind these mountains was not well known. The Matsya Purana reads Tri-bhāgā (cxiii 31) which I have not met elsewhere.
- 12 This is the river on which Ganjam stands, and it bears the same name still. It is mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 343). The Vāyu Purāna reads Rtu-kulyā (xlv 106) by mistake. Another Rsi-kulyā is mentioned in verse 23.
- 13 This is not in the dictionary. The Vāyu (xlv 106) and Varāha Purānas (lxxxv) read Iksulā, and Iksudā which the Matsya Purāna reads (cxiii 31) is a variant. I have not found any of these names elsewhere, but the R Iksu is mentioned (M Bh, Bhīṣma P ix 324). It is probably one of the small streams on the Eastern coast.
- 14 This is the second Tridivā, see verse 23, but I have not found two rivers of this name mentioned anywhere else. Instead of Tridivā ca ya as in the text, the Matsya Purāna reads Tridivācalā (cxiii 31).
- 15 This is the modern Languliya, on which Chicacole stands, between Vizianagram and Calingapatam. The Varāha Purāna reads Mūlinī or Lāmūlinī (lxxxv) and the Matsya Mūli (cxiii 31). I have not found these names elsewhere and they seem incorrect. The Lāngali mentioned in the M Bh, (Sabhā P ix 374), is probably this river.
- 16 The Varāha Purāna reads Vamśa-varā (lxxxv) and the Vāyu Vamsadharā (xlv 106), the latter is the correct name. It is the modern Bansdharā, the river on which Calingapatam stands.
- 17 The Kūrma Purāna omits this group of rivers altogether and puts three of them Tri-sāmā, Rṣikā and Vamsadhāriṇī into the next group (xlvii 36). The Matsya Purāna mentions three more rivers, the Tāmraparṇī, Śaravā and Vimalā (cxiii 31), but all these seem doubtful. A Tāmraparṇī has been mentioned in verse 28. A Śaravati is named in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 327) and a Vimalā or Vimalodā in various passages (e.g. Śālya P xxxix 2214-5, Hari V, clxviii 9517-8), but they are in Northern and Western India.

कुशा पलाशिनी चैव शुक्तिमत्प्रभवाः स्मृताः।

The Rsi-kulyā¹ and Kumārī,² Manda-gā,³ Mandavāhinī,⁴ Kṛpā⁵ and Palāśinī⁶ are known to spring in the Śūktimat⁷ mountains.

In note on page 244, the Mahendra mountains are said to be "the portion of the Eastern Ghats between the Godāvari and Mahānadī rivers and the hills in the south of Berar," but this proposition must be modified on a full consideration of all the foregoing identifications. Gondwana as used by Wilson was applied to a very wide tract in Central India. The Mahendra Mountains cannot extend as far west as Berar nor beyond the Wain-ganga, and must be limited to the hills between the Mahānadī, Godāvari and Wain-ganga and may perhaps comprise only the portion of the Eastern Ghats north of the Godāvari. It is in this last tract only that the name has survived. See Raghu Vamśa, iv 43.

- 1 This is the second Rsi-kulyā, see verse 28. The Vāyu Purāna reads Rśikā (xlv 107) and the Varāha Rśikā (xxxv) and the Matsya kāsikā (cxiii 32). I have not met with these names elsewhere.
- 2 The Vāyu Purāna reads Su-kumārī (xlv 107) and the Varāha Lūsati. I have not found these names elsewhere, but the Kumārī is mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 313).
- 3 This is mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 340). The Varāha Purāna reads Manda-gāminī (lxxxv), and for this and the next river the Kūrma reads Gandha-mādana-gāminī (xlvii 36), which is probably erroneous.
- 4 This is mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 340), but hardly in the same connection.
- 5 The Vāyu Purāna reads Kūpā (xlv 107) and the Kūrma Kūpā or Rūpā (xlvii 36). I do not find any of these names elsewhere. A river Kṛtyā is mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 326), but that appears from its context to be in north India.
- 6 This is mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 330), but in so different a connection that the references appear to be to two separate rivers. The Matsya Purāna reads Pāsini (cxiii 32), which however I have not met elsewhere.
- 7 These Mts. are but very rarely mentioned, and in page 244 note I have noticed what has been written about them. They were in the Eastern region, for Bhīma in his conquests in that quarter marched from Himavat towards Bhallāta and conquered the Śūktimat mountain (M Bh, Sabhā P xxxix 1079). Though Bhallāta does not appear to have been identified, the only noteworthy hills in the east which have not been assigned to the other great ranges are the Garo, Khāsi and Tipperah Hills which bound Bengal in that direction. Can these be the Śūktimat Mts? There seems to be no improbability in this, for the river Lohita or Brahmaputra and the country Kāmarūpa, which is in the Assam Valley, were known. If this identification is satisfactory the R Kumārī may be the modern Someśvarī which flows southward between the Garo and Khāsi Hills (both being names of Durgā), and the Kṛpā may perhaps be the Kapili which flows into the Brahmaputra a little

- 8 Saras-vatyah. Or should this mean only the rivers called Sarasvatī? There were seven rivers specially distinguished by this name (M Bh, Śālya P xxxix 2188-9), namely, 1 The Suprabhā among the Puskaras (ibid 2198-2200), that is, near Ajmur, 2 The Kāñcanākṣī in Naimiṣa forest (ibid 2201-4), which was on the Gomati, 3 The Viśālā at Gaya (ibid 2205-6), 4 The Manoramā, the swift stream flowing from Himavat in the north part of Kosala (ibid 2207-10), 5 The Oghavati, which seems to be in Kurukṣetra (ibid 2212-3), 6 The Surenu, which seems to be in Kurukṣetra or near Gangādvāra (ibid 2211-4), 7 The Vimalodā or Vimalodakā at Haimantagiri (ibid 2214-5).
- 9 Viśvasya mātaraḥ, compare M Bh, Bhīṣma P ix 344.
- 10 The people and their country both went by the name Matsya. This country was part of the region called Brahmarshi (Manu ii 19). It was south or south-west of Indraprastha, the modern Delhi (M Bh, Sabhā P xxx 1105-6, the mention in ibid xxix 1083 may be a mistake, but the Matsyas are named twice in the Bhīṣma P list, ix 347 and 348, unless one name be a mistake for Vatsa), and it was west of Surasena, which was the country round Mathurā, the modern Muttra (Virāṭa P, v 141-5, see note in canto lviii verse 7), hence Matsya comprised the modern Alwar State and the land around that. It appears to have extended up to Kurukṣetra, because no other country which could intervene is mentioned in Manu ii 19. Its capital was Upaplavya or Upalava (Śālya P, xxxvi 1973-6) which was 11/2 or 2 days' journey by chariot from Hastināpura (Udyoga P, lxxxiii 3010-17, lxxxv 3040, and lxxxviii 3101). Cunningham says Matsya was the country west of Agra and north of the R Chambal, i.e., the whole of Alwar with portions of Jaypur and Bharatpur, and its capital was Vairāṭa, the modern Bairat (Arch Surv Repts, II 242, and XX 2, and plate i).

Aśvakūtas¹ and kulyas,² the Kuntalas,³ the people of Kāśī⁴ and the Kośalas⁵ and the Atharvas and Arka-lingas⁶ and the Malakas⁷ and Vrkas,⁸ these⁹ are well known

The Vāyu Purāna reads Vatsas instead (xlv 110) Vatsa or Vātsya was in the region east of Delhi (Sabhā P, xxix 1084) and king Vatsa who is said to have given his name to the country was grandson of Divodāsa, king of Benares (Hari V, xxix 1587, 1597, and xxxii 1753) Kausāmbī was the capital, and it has been identified by Cunningham with the modern Kosam which is on the north bank of the Jumna about 31 miles above Allahabad Hence the country was also called Kausāmba (Arch Surv Repts, I 301-310) Vatsa or Kausāmba therefore comprised the lower part of the Ganges and Jumna Doab and also probably the tract south of that, on the other side of the Jumna

- 1 The Vāyu Purāna reads Kīśasnas, Kīśastas or Kīśadyas instead (xlv 110), but none of these names are in the dictionary The Matsya reads kīrātas (cxiii 35) but they are out of place here The text reads Matsyasvakūṭah kulyasca, but I would suggest instead Matsyās ca Kanyakubhas ca, thus reading Kanyā-kubjasor Kānyakubhas instead of Aśvakūtas and Kulyas Kanyā-kubja or Kānyakubja is the modern Kanauj, on the Ganges about 50 miles above Cawnpore, it was a famous city all through Indian history People called Sukutyas are mentioned (Bhīṣma P, ix 347), Aśvakas (ibid 351) and Aśvātakas (ibid li 2105)
- 2 This is not in the dictionary as a people, the word occurs in Vana P, (cxxv 10408), but does not appear to mean a people there See the last note
- 3 This country is said by Muir to be one of the Pīśāca countries (Sansk Texts, II 59), but there were three people of this name, one in the Dekhan (Bhīṣma P, ix 367), who are mentioned in verse 48 below, and two others elsewhere (ibid 347 and 359) Those mentioned in verse 347 are the people meant here, for they are grouped with the people of Kāśī and Kosala, and they probably occupied the country near Chunār (south of Benares), which Cunningham calls Kuntīla (Arch Surv Repts, XI 123) The third people were probably in the West
- 4 Benares, the ancient Vārānaśī It was the capital of an ancient and famous kingdom According to the Rāmāyana Kāśī was a kingdom (Ādi K, xii 20) while Prayāga and the country all around it was still forest (Journal, R A S, 1894, pp 237-239) Its sacred character dates from comparatively late times, for it was one of the exploits for which Kṛṣṇa was extolled that he burnt it for a succession of years and devastated it (Udyoga P, xlvii 1883, and Hari V, clxi 9142-3) For some vicissitudes in its early history, see Hari V, xxix and xxxii
- 5 Kosala, Kosala or Uttara Kosala, with its capital Ayodhyā, is the modern Oudh Gen Cunningham says it meant more particularly the country north and east of the R. Raptī (Arch Surv Repts, I 327, and XVII 68), but it seems rather to have denoted the country stretching from the Raptī on the east (see page 248 note) to the confines of the Kuru and Pāñcāla kingdoms on the west Northward it was bounded by the tribes that inhabited the slopes of the Himalayas and southward by the kingdom of Benares It was distinguished from another Kosala, which was called Dakṣiṇa or Mahā Kosala and which is mentioned in verse 54

- 6 These two names are not in the dictionary and I have not found them elsewhere, they seem to be mistakes The Vāyu Purāna reads instead of them atha pārśve tilangāś ca (xlv 111), but this is doubtful and unsatisfactory, for the Tilangas are mentioned as a southern people in chap 55, verse 28 The Matsya reads and Āvantas and Kalingas (cxiii 36), but these are hardly satisfactory the former are mentioned in verse 52 and 55 and the latter in verses 37 and 46 below Perhaps Arka-lingas may be meant as a synonym of Sūrya-vamsas, the Solar Race, yet this again is hardly satisfactory, for that race reigned in Kosala, which has just been mentioned separately There is a low group of Brāhmins in Bihar called Atharvas (Risley's Tribes and Castes of Bengal, I 26)
- 7 This is not in the dictionary and seems erroneous The Vāyu Purāna reads Magadhas instead (xlv 111), the people of Magadha or South Bihar, but this is unsatisfactory for the Magadhas are mentioned in verse 44 The Matsya reads Mūkas (cxiii 36) which I have not met elsewhere The reading should be Malajas probably They are mentioned in the M Bh (Bhīṣma P ix 357) and Rāmāyana (Ādi K, xxvii 16 23) and from the course described in the latter poem as taken by Viśvāmitra and Rāma it appears they were neighbours of the Karūvas, (see note to verse 53) and occupied the district of Shahabad, west of the Sonc, for Viśvāmitra and Rāma crossing from the Sarayū to the south of the Ganges entered that district, which had been inhabited by the Malayas (ibid 8-16)
- 8 The Vrkas are named in Bhīṣma P, li 2106 and a king Vrka is alluded to in the Hari-Vamsa (xiii 760-61), but there is nothing to identify them The Matsya Purāna reads Andhakas (cxiii 36) The Andhakas were a subordinate family of the Yādava race and are often mentioned in the M Bh, (e g Udyoga P, lxxxv 304) and Hari Vamsa (xxxv 1907-8, and xxxix 2041, and xciv 5190-5204), but they dwelt in Surāstra in the West and appear to be out of place here The most probable reading seems to be the Vrajas, the people of Vraja (or Vrji, as it was also called), the modern Braj, the country north-west of Mathurā or Muttra
- 9 This is a short list Besides these the Vāyu Purāna has two lines at the beginning of this group, viz, "the Kuru, the Pāñcālas and the Śālvas and the Jāngalas, the Śūrasenas, the Bhadrakāras, the Bodhas and the lords of Śatapatha" (xlv 109 and 110), much like a passage in the M Bh, (Bhīṣma P, ix 346-7) The Matsya has the same lines, but gives the last two names as Bāhyas and Pataccaras (cxiii 35, 36) For the Kuru, see chap 55, verse 9, for the Pāñcālas, chap 55 verse 8, for the Śālavas, chap 55, verse 6, the Jāngalas are not doubt the people of Kuru-jāngala, see note to Kuru, chap 55, verse 9, for the Śūrasenas, see chap 55, verse 7 The Bhadrakāras are mentioned in the M Bh, (Sabhā P, xiii 590) and may perhaps be the same as the Bhadrās mentioned in Vana P, ccliii 15256, they appear from these passages to have been situated on the west bank of the Jumna, somewhere between Delhi and Muttra The Bodhas are mentioned in the M Bh, (Sabhā P, xiii 590, Bhīṣma P, ix 347) and are probably the same as the Bodhis (Rāmāy, Ayodh K, lxx 15), who appear to have been situated on the eastern confines of the Punjab I have not met Bāhyas elsewhere, it seems erroneous Śatapatha seems to be erroneous and Pataccara is much better The Pataccaras are mentioned in the M Bh, (Sabhā P, xiii 590-1, xxx 1108, Virāta P, 1 11-12) and appear from the second of these passages to have occupied the tract south of the Aparā-matsyas, that is probably the country south-west of Gwalior

- 1 Madhya-deśa, the whole of the Ganges basin from the Punjab as far east as the confines of Bihar, but Manu restricts it and defines its limits thus (ii 21)—north, the Himalayas, south, the Vindhya Range, west, Vinasāna which is where the R Sarasvatī perishes in the desert (M Bh, Śālya P, xxxviii 2119-20), and east, Prayāga or Allahabad
- 2 The text Sahyasya cottare yas tu seems incorrect, these words cannot well go with the preceding verse, for no people north of the Sahya Mts and south of the Pāripātra Mts could be within Madhya-deśa, and they do not agree with the following words The Vāyu Purāṇa reads sahyasva cottarārdhe tu, which I have adopted That Purāna agrees and is a little fuller—"Now along the northern half of the Sahya mountains where the river Godavari flows, that region is a delightful one within the whole of this earth This paradise named Govardhana was built there by Surarāja for the sake of Rāma's spouse, the trees and herbs there were brought down from above by the Muni Bharadvāja for the sake of Rāma's spouse He made a delightful wooded tract the private part of the palace (antahpura)" (xlv 112-114) The Matsya Purāna reads Sahyasyanantare cate and is similar, but varies at the second sentence, Mandara, Gandha-madana, trees from Svarga and heavenly plants (osadhīh, acc) were brought down by the Muni Bharadvāja for the sake of the spouse, hence that region excels in flowers, therefore it has become delightful" (cxiii 37-39) The Rāma alluded to here must be Rāmā Jāmadagnya or Paraśurāma, who dwelt in this region, see the next note
- 3 These people are here placed on the east side of the Sahya mountains among the sources of the Godavari This region and the country west of it on the other side of these mountains and the tract northwards to the Narmadā are connected in many a story with Bhṛgu, his Cyavana and his descendants Rctka, Jamadagni and Paraśurāma (e.g. M Bh, Ādi P, clxxxviii 6802-10, Vana P, cxxi and cxxii with Śatapatha Brāhmana IV I 5, Vana P, lxxxix 8364-5, cxv 10150-2, Śānti P xlix 1778-82, Vana P, xcix 8681-8 with Śānti P, ii) The Bhārgavas were however a numerous race and spread into other regions, they are also mentioned as one of the eastern peoples in verse 43 below They held a high position and appear to have been numerous in king Kṛtavīrya's kingdom at Māhīṣmati and after his death their wealth, it is said, brought down on them the hostility of the Kṣatriyas (Ādi P, clxxxviii 6802-15) Govardhana (masc) as a city is not in the dictionary I have not found it alluded to elsewhere

- 4 Vahlīka or Bahlīka or Bāhīka is said in the dictionary to be the modern Balkh and in Lassen's map to be the ancient Bactriane, but there was another country, it is not two tribes of this name, in the Punjab The name is written Vahlīka or Vāhīka and there may have been a distinction between the two words, for both are mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 354 and 361) These were not uncommon names and there were two princes called Vāhīka between Parīkṣit and Bhīṣma in the Lunar Dynasty and the later prince is styled a king (M Bh, Ādi P, xciv 3745 and 3750-51, and xcv 3798-3800) The Vāhīkas are mentioned twice in the Rāmāyana and are placed in the western region (Kisk K xliii 5) and also in the northern region (ibid xlv 13) A distinction as between two people of this name is also indicated by the mention of two independent kings of the Vāhīkas reigning contemporaneously in the M Bh (Ādi P, clxxxvi 6992, Sabhā P xxviii 1266 and 1272, Udyoga P iii 74 and 77) One of these who peoples was closely connected with the Madras, for Śālya, king of Madra, is also called lord of the Vāhīkas (Ādi P cxiii 4425-40, and lxxvii 2642) and his sister Mādri is called Vāhīki also (ibid, cxxv 4886), and an ancient eponymous king Vāhīka is placed in the same Krodha-vasa gana with the eponymous kings Madraka and Suvira (ibid lxxvii 2695-6) The other people of this name appear to have been closely connected with the Daradas who were a mountain tribe in the north of the Punjab (see note to verse 38) and are the modern Dards of Dardistan, for an ancient king Darada the Vāhīka is mentioned who did not belong to the Krodha-vasa group (Ādi P lxxvii 2694), and the Vāhīkas are linked with the Daradas (Bhīṣma P cxviii 5484) and are mentioned with the Kambojas and Yavanas and other ultra-Punjab tribes (Drona P cxxi 4818, see also Sabhā P xxvi 1031-2) If these inferences may be trusted, one Vāhīka or Vāhīka was situated in the plains of the Punjab alongside Madradśa and very possibly south of it (see Rāmāy. Ayodh.K. lxx. 16-19, with note to Madrakas in verse 36 and note to Kaikeyas in verse 37) i.e., between the rivers Chenab and Sutlej; and the other among the lower slopes of the Himalayas, very possibly between the Chenab and Bias. The name Vāhlika appears to have been altered in later times to Bāhika seemingly by a punning resemblance to vahis, "outside", because they were shut out by the Sarasvatī, Kurukṣetra and other natural features from the central country which remained true to Brahmanism. The people of the Punjab were then collectively called Āraṭtas or Bāhikas, and they and all the tribes beyond were stigmatized as impure and contemptible by the arrogant and intolerant brāhmaṇas of Madhyadeśa (Muir's Sansk. Texts II. 482 and M.Bh., Karmā P. xlv. 2026; see also Cunningham's Arch. Surv. Repts., II. 6, 14, 17, 195).

1. This people is mentioned in several passages in the M.Bh. (Sabhā P. I. 1826; Udyoga P. iii. 86; Bhīṣma P. ix. 354; and Droṇa P. xi. 398) and their name appears to be derived from an eponymous king Vāṭadhāna, who was of the same Krodha-vuśa group as the eponymous kings of the Vāhlikas, Madras and Sauvīras (Ādi P. lxvii. 2695-9). No doubt therefore they dwelt alongside those tribes. Their country Vāṭadhāna was part of the territory stretching from Pañcanada to the Ganges, over which the hosts assembled on the Kauravas' side spread at the beginning of the great war (Udyoga P. xviii. 596-601) and it was in the western region (Sabhā P. xxxi. 1190-1). From these data it may be inferred that the Vāṭadhānas inhabited the country on the east side of the Sutlej, southward from Ferozpur. Manu declares a Vāṭadhāna to be the offspring of an outcaste brāhmaṇa and a brāhmaṇa woman (x. 21), but that is no doubt an expression of the same arrogance which in later times stigmatized all the Punjab races as outcastes (as mentioned in the last note), for Vāṭadhāna dvijās were among the people whom Nakula conquered (Sabhā P. xxxi. 1190-1). The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Vāḍhadhānas (xliv. 115) erroneously.
2. They were an aboriginal tribe and are called Mlecchas and dasyus. (M.Bh. Vana P. clxxxviii. 12838-40; and Mausala P. vii. 222). They were scattered over various tracts and gained their livelihood in various ways. Three divisions of them are mentioned in the M.Bh. (Sabhā P. xxxi. 1192), those who dwelt along the river Sarasvatī, those who lived by fishing and those who inhabited the mountains. The first group occupied the north portion of the desert as far east as Vīnaśana on that river, for it is said the river perished there because of her hatred of them (Śalya P. xxxviii. 2119-20) and as far west as Pañcanada (Mausala P. vii. 220-242; and viii. 270; where Pañcajana is probably a mistake for Pañcanada); this group is probably the tribe of Ābhīras mentioned in Kišk. K. xliii.5. The context indicates that the third group were the mountaineers of the Aravalli Range and the hills of Malwa; but there was another section of this group which appears to have occupied the hilly tracts in the north or west of the Punjab, for it is classed with the Daradas and Kāśmīras (Bhīṣma P. ix. 375; and see note to verse 38) and with the Pāradas (Sabhā P. I. 1832; and see note to verse 337). The Ābhīras were closely connected with the Śūdras in these three groupings (Sabhā P. xxxi. 1192; and see note to next verse). The descendants of all these Ābhīras are the modern Ahirs who are scattered widely over Hindustan proper. Another body of Ābhīras was found in the Dekhan (see verse 47). The Ābhīras are said in the Hari-Vaṁśa to have been dominated by the Daityas and Dānavas in ancient times and to have been the chief inhabitants of the country from the Jumna to the peninsula of Gujarat (xciv. 5142-80).

3. So also in the Matsya Purāṇa (cxiii. 40). This word is written Kālaḷośaka in the M.Bh. (Bhīṣma P. ix. 354), but I have not found either name elsewhere. Possible readings might be Bālaḷartikāh or Bālakāthikāh. The former, however, seems inappropriate; the Jartikas are the same as the Bāhikas (Karmā P. xlv. 2033; Arch. Surv. Repts. II. 13 and 195) who are noticed in the note to "Vāhlikas" (page 255). The "Bālas and Kāthis" would be a preferable reading. The Bālas, according to Cunningham, occupied the northern portion of Sindh and were ousted from there about the middle of the seventh century A.D. and moved south-east. The Kāthis (the Kathaei of the Greek writers), according to the same authority occupied the Rechna Doab between the Chenab and Ravi rivers and also probably the northern portion of Sindh; they have retained the former territory, but those who held the latter were driven from it about the middle of the seventh century A.D. and settled in the peninsula of Gujarat where they have given the name Kāthiāwār to a district (Arch. Surv. Repts., II. 38-37).
4. Apavānta means "living at the western border." A people of this name is mentioned in the M.Bh. (Bhīṣma P., ix. 355) and allusion is often made to Aparānta and the Aparāntas (c.g., Vana P. ccxvii. 7885-6; and Śānti P. xlix. 1780-2); but the word, though it no doubt designates a people living in the extreme west, yet seems to have a general meaning in most passages (see verse 52 below) and those passages which use it in a restricted sense do not agree—thus Aparānta is stated to be a country in the middle of the sea (Raghu. V., iv. 58, commentary), yet the Aparāntikas in chap. 55, verse 34 are placed in the tortoise's tail, that is, north of Sindhun and Sauvira which are placed by verse 30 in the right hind foot. Cunningham, judging from the spots where coins have been found, was inclined to locate them in Northern Sindh and parts of West Rajputana (Arch. Surv. Repts., XIV. 136, 137) which will satisfy chap. 55, verse 34. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Aparītas instead (xliv. 115) which seems erroneous. The Rāmāyaṇa mentions simply the aparās (Kišk. K., xliii. 23). The Matsya Purāṇa reads Purandhras (cxiii. 40) erroneously.
5. The Śūdras are often linked together with the Ābhīras (M. Bh., Sabhā P. xxxi. 1192; Bhīṣma P. ix. 375; Droṇa P. xx. 789; Śalya P. xxxviii. 2119-20). They appear to have been considered dasyus (Śānti P. clxxi. 6372 and clxxiii. 6446) and mlecchas (Vana P. clxxxviii. 12838-40 where Śūra seems a mistake for Śūdra); yet their women are alluded to in rather favourable terms (Sabhā P. I. 1829). They were divided into the same three groups as the Ābhīras, viz., men of the plains, men of the sea-coast and men of the hills (Sabhā P. xxxi. 1192), inhabiting much the same the Pallavas¹ Carma-khandikas, ² Gāndhāras³ and Gabalas,⁴ the Sindhu,⁵ Sauvīras⁶ and

Madrakas⁷ and the people who dwell along regions (see note to Ābhīras in verse 35, for Śūtras in Rāmāy Kisk K, xlvi 19 read probably Śūtras) Hence it would seem these two people were considerably intermixed and were probably closely connected aboriginal races. One group of the Sūdras was known to the Greeks as Sudraka, and is placed by Cunningham in the middle of the trainable of the Punjab (Anc Geog, I 214-218, and Arch Surv Repts, II)

- 1 This is no doubt a mistake for Pahlavas, which the Vāyu Purānas reads (xlv 115) and which occurs in chap 55, verse 30, though Pallavas are mentioned in the MBh (Vana P I 1990). The Pahlavas are understood to be the Pahlavi or ancient Persians. Two people of this name are mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 355 and 375), but there appear to be no data to make a distinction as the allusions to the Pahlavas are generally vague, unless it be supposed there was a Pahlava colony in the Punjab, and this supposition would suit this verse, for the Persians were altogether outside India. The Hari-Vamśa says King Sagara defeated a great confederation of Pahlavas and other people, abrogated their laws, degraded them and made them wear beards (xiii 763-4, and xiv 775-783), but this seems a late fable, on a par with their being called dasyus (id cxv 6440-3). The Rāmāyana has an absurd fable about the creation of the Pahlavas and other foreign races by Vasistha (Ādi K, lv 18-20, and lv 2-3), when contending with Viśvāmitra he made his cow create Pahlavas Śakas, Yavanas and Viśvāmitra destroyed them all in succession.
- 2 Or Carma-maṅḍalas as in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 355) which this Purāna has followed closely in enumerating this group of races. The Vāyu, however, reads the same as in the text (xlv 115). I have not found any of these names elsewhere, but the name suggests identification with Samarkand. The Matsya Purāna reads Ātta-khanalīkas or Cāta-khandīkas (cxiii 40) which appear to be erroneous.
- 3 Gāndhāra was the whole of the lower basin of the Kabul river (Arch Surv Repts, II 15 and map to p 87). It was a famous country in ancient times, its kings ranked with the highest Indian Sovereigns and its princesses married into the noblest royal families. The passages in which the Gāndhāras are pronounced bad and impure (e.g., Śānti P lxxv 2429-31, and ccvii 7560-1, and Karna P xlv 2070) betray the interpolated sentiments of a later age (Muir's Sansk Texts, II 482).
- 4 This is not in the dictionary. The Vāyu Purāna reads Yavanas instead (xlv 116) and so also the Matsya (cxiii 41), this word is supposed to have denoted the Greeks originally, but the Yavanas appear to have been known in India long before Alexander's time. The Bhīṣma P list mentions the Giri-gahvaras in this region (ix 375).
- 5 Primarily Sindhu meant the country along the Indus, but it has generally denoted the lower portion of that country, that is, the modern Sindh more or less closely. It is placed by chap 55, verse 30 in the Tortoise's right hind foot and it stretched down to the peninsula of Kāthiāvār which is called the territory of Sindhu-Rāja in the Hari-Vamśa (cxiv 6407-12). The Sindhus are mentioned frequently in the MBh, and are named twice in the Bhīṣma P list, first in connection with the Pulindas (ix 343) and again in conjunction with the Sauvīras (ix 361), but there do not appear to be any other passages which tend to shew a division. Sindhu had a well-known breed of horses (Drona P xxiii 973).

- 6 The Sauvīra, claimed descent from an eponymous king Suvīra of the same Krodha-vaśa group of the Madras and Vāhlikas (MBh, Ādi P lxxvii 2695-60, but the genealogy of Suvīra in the Hari-Vamśa (xxxii 1679) is fanciful. Sauvīra was closely connected with Sindhu, for the two are often coupled together and Jayadratha king of Sindhu was also lord of Sauvīra and the Sauvīras, and is styled Saindhava and Sauvīra indifferently (Vana P, cclxiii 15576-81, cclxvi 15618 and 15635-7, and cclxvii 15639-51). Cunningham identifies Sauvīra with the country between the Indus and Jhelam, that is, the Sindh-Sagar Doab (Arch Surv Repts II 4-6, 14 and 23), that hardly agrees with the position assigned to it in the Tortoise's right hind foot but the collection of races in that region is rather confused. May we suppose that Sauvīra was rather the name of the people while Sindhu more properly denoted the territory? The Sauvīras might then have inhabited the northern part of Sindh and Sauvīra would have been that portion only of the larger area. This theory seems to satisfy the conditions generally. Along with the Sauvīras and Saindhavas the Kūrma Purāna mentions (xlvii 40) "the Hūnas (or Kūnas), the Mālyas (or Śālvās), the inhabitants of Bālyā (or Kalpa)". For the Hūnas, see note to chap 54, verse 45, Kūnc seems erroneous, for the Śālvās, see chap 55, verse 6, Mālyā seems erroneous, Bālyā and Kalpa seem unidentifiable.
- 7 The Madras or Mādras claimed descent from an eponymous king Madraka of the same Krodha-vaśa group as the Sauvīras and Vāhlikas (MBh, Ādi P, lxxvii 2695 6, and see note on page 255), but his genealogy in the Hari-Vamśa (xxxii 1679) seems fanciful. Cunningham places Madra between the Jhelam and Ravi rivers, that is, in the Chej and Rechna Doabs (Arch Surv Repts II 4, 8, 14 and 39), yet he also says it is the country between the Jhelam and Bias or between the Chenab and Bias (ibid 196), but it could hardly have comprised much of the Chej Doab for the Kaikeyas occupied the greater part of that (see note to next verse). The capital of Madra was Śākala (Sabhā P, xxxi 1197) which Cunningham has identified with the modern Sangala, on the R. Apagā which is the modern Ayak (Arch Surv Repts, II 195-6 and Karna P, xlv 2033). The R. Irāvati flowed through Madra-deśa, but near the eastern border (ibid, 2038-41, and Matsya Purāna cxiv 7 and 15-18). Madra then was the country around Sangala, with the tracts on either side watered by the Chenab and Ravi. It was a famous kingdom. The weird story told about king Vyusitāsva's queen (Ādi P, cxxi 4695-4714) no doubt means her sons became Madras and did not originate the Madras. In later times the brāhmanas of Hindustan pronounced the Madras, like the Gāndhāras, base and impure (Śānti P, ccvii 7559-61, and Hari-V, xiv 784), see especially Karna P xlv 2033-53, where the Madras are abused in good set terms. The Vāyu Purāna reads Bhadrakas erroneously (xlv 116).

the Śatadru,¹ the Kalingas,² the Pāradas,³ the Hīāia-bhūśikas,⁴ the Mātharas⁵ and the Bahu-

- 1 That is, the Sutlej, Śatadru-jar But this seems mistaken for the Vāyu Purāna reads Śakas and Hradas (xlv 116), and the Matsya Śakas and Druhyas (cxiii 41) The Śakas, therefore, are no doubt one of the people meant (see note to chap 55, verse 6) Hrada seems erroneous The Druhyas may be connected with Yāyāti's son Druhyu who was king of the West, (Hari-V, xxx 1604 and 1618), but I have not met with them elsewhere
- 2 This seems erroneous These people are mentioned in verse 46 and there seems to be no ground for thinking any Kalingas lived in North India, yet Kalingas are mentioned in such a connection (Bhīṣma P, ix 376, and lxxi 3132, and see note to Arkalingas in verse 33) and a town Kalinga-nagara is mentioned in the Rāmāy On the west of the Gomati and not far from it (Ayodh K, lxxiii 14, 15) A tribe called Kulingas is alluded to (Drona P, cxxi 4819) The Vāyu Purāna reads Kulingas instead (xlv 116), which is no doubt right Cunningham says the Kulindas or Kunindas are the modern Kunnets who occupy Kullu and the Simla hills and the slopes below, along both sides of the Sutlej (Arch Surv Repts, XIV 116 and 125-130) The Kulinas extended further east along the southern slopes of the Himalayas as far as Nepal for they were the first nation which Arjuna conquered in his Northward march from Indraprastha (Sabhā P, xxv 996) and they also occupied the hills north of Mandara, that is, the Almora hills (id, li 1858-9, and note to page 245 above), indeed the name appears to have comprised a considerable body of hill tribes, for "all the countries of Kulinda" are spoken of (Vana P, clxxvii 12350)
The Matsya Purāna reads Pulindas (cxiii 41) The Pulindas were a rude tribe inhabiting the Himalayas and intermixed with Kirātas and Tanganas (Vana P, cxl 10863-5, and Drona P, cxxi 4846-7, and see notes to verses 40 and 41), they were considered mlecchas (Vana P, clxxxviii 12838-40), and are declared to have become degraded because of the extinction of sacred rites, (Anuśās P, lvii 2103) There was another body of Pulindas in Central India (Sabhā P, xxviii 1068, and xxx 1120, and Śānti P, ccvii 7559)
- 3 The Pāradas are generally mentioned with hill tribes (Sabhā P, I 1832, li 1869, and Drona P, cxxi 4819) They appear to have been a hill tribe like the Kulindas and Tanganas (see note to verse 41 below) and to have dwelt in the western portion of the Himalayas (Sabhā P, li 1858-9), though they are placed in the tortoise's right hind foot by chap 55, verse 31, the races placed there, however, are strangely confused Manu says they were Kṣatriyas and became degraded because of the extinction of sacred rites (x 43-44), and the Hari-Vamśa says king Sagara degraded them and ordered them to wear long hair (xiii 763-4 and xiv 775-83) and they were mlecchas and dasyus (id, cxv 6440-42) The Vāyu Purāna reads Paritas instead (xlv 116)
- 4 This is not in the dictionary The Vāyu Purāna reads Hara-pūrikas instead (xlv 116) and the Matsya Hāra-mūrtikas (cxiii 41), but I have not found any of these names elsewhere Should the reading be Hāra-hūnakas? The

- Hāra-hūnas are mentioned in the MBh, as a people outside India on the west (Sabhā P, xxxi 1194, I 1844, and Vana P, li 1991)
- 5 The Vāyu Purāna reads Ramatas instead (xlv 117) and the Matsya Rāmāthas (cxiii 42) and the Kūrma mentions a people called Rāmas (xlvii 41) The reading should, no doubt, be Ramatas, Rāmāthas or Rāmāthas, they were a western people mentioned in the MBh (Sabhā P, xxxi 1195, Vana P, li 1991, and Śānti P, lxxv 2430) The Ramanas (Bhīṣma P, ix 374) may be the same people There are, however, no sufficient data to identify any of them
- 6 The Vāyu Purāna reads Raddha-katakas instead (xlv 117), the MBh, mentions the Bāhu-bādhas (Bhīṣma P, ix 362) and the Bātabhadras (Karna P, vi 153), and the Matsya Purāna reads Kantakāras (cxiii 42), but none of these seems satisfactory and I have not met any of them elsewhere
- 7 These people were called Kekayas, Kaikayas and Kaikeyas An eponymous ancestor Kaikaya is assigned to them by the Hari-Vamśa (xxxii 1679), but his genealogy seems fanciful They were a powerful and famous nation, and were noted bowmen (Sabhā P, iv 126, and Vana P, ccixvii 15654) They inhabited the Punjab and appear to have joined the Madras, for the two are sometimes coupled together (Sabhā P, li 1870, and Drona P, xx 799), and chap 55 places them both in the tortoise's left side (verses 42 and 45) Their capital was Rājagraha (Rāmāy, Ādi K, lxxix 35-44) or Girivraja (id, Avodh K, lxxi 1, and lxxii 1) Lassen places the Kaikeyas between the Ravi and Bias rivers Cunningham, however, dissents and places them on the line of the Jhelam, west of the Bāhikas and proposes to identify Giri-vraja with Girjāk, which was the ancient name of Jalalpur on that river (Arch Surv Repts, II 14), and this agrees with the Rāmāy (Ayodh K, lxx 16-19)
- 8 These people are mentioned in the MBh (Bhīṣma P, ix 374) The Vāyu Purāna reads Daśa-mālikas (xlv 117) Does the word mean "the ten tribes of Mālikas?" The Mālikas may perhaps be identified with the Malli (Arch Surv Repts, II 37) The Matsya Purāna reads Daśa-nāmakas (cxiii 42), which seems mistaken
- 9 Upa-ni-veśa, a word not in the dictionary It seems to be synonymous with ni-veśa which appears to be the word meant in the corresponding passage in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 374, kṣatriyā yoniveśās ca, but kṣātrīyopāniveśās ca would be preferable) Ni-veśa is used elsewhere in the MBh (e.g., Sabhā P, xiii 615, and xiv 798) and in the Rāmāy (Kiṣk K, xliii 24) and appears to denote a military colony or settlement in a foreign country
- 10 That is, Śūdras as a caste and not as a race, as a race they have been mentioned in verse 36

The Kāmbojas¹ and the Daradas² and the Varvaras,³ the Harshvardhanas⁴ and the Cīnas,⁵

- 1 The Kāmbojas were in the extreme north of the Punjab beyond the Indus and were classed with the Daradas (Sabhā P, xxvi 1031), with Yavanas and Śakas (Udyoga P, xviii 590) and with Cīnas (Bhīṣma P, ix 373) Their country was famous for its large and fleet breed of horses which are often mentioned (Sabhā P, I 1824, Bhīṣma P, lxxi 3131, Drona P, xxiii 972, cxxi 4831-2—also Rāmāy, Ādi K, vi 24, and Sundar K, xii 36—and Raghu V, iv 70) Lassen places Kāmboja doubtfully south of Kashgar and east of the modern Kafiristan (Ind Alt, map) They were Āryans by language (Muir's Sansk Texts, II 368-9) Manu says (x 43-44) they were Kṣatriyas and became degraded through the extinction of sacred rites, they are called mlecchas (Vana P, clxxxviii 12838-40) and said to have evil customs (Śānti P, ccvii 7560-61) The Hari-Vamśa says they were degraded by King Sagara and ordered to shave the whole of the head like the Yavanas (xiii 763-4, and xiv 775-83) The Rāmāy, has an absurd fable about their origin (Ādi K, lvi 2, see page 257 note)
- 2 Darada is the modern Dardistan, the country north of Gāndhāra and north-west of Kashmir This region satisfies all the allusions to the Daradas They were a hill people (Drona P, cxxi 4835-7 and 4846-7, neighbours of the Kashmiras (id, lxx 2435), of the Kāmbojas (Sabhā P, xxvi 1031), and of the Cīnas and Tusāras (Vana P, clxxxviii 12350), they fought largely with stones and were skilled in slinging stones (Drona P, cxxi 4835-47) Manu says they were Kṣatriyas and became degraded because of the extinction of sacred rites (x 43 and 44), and like the Pāradas and others they were considered mlecchas and dasyus (Hari-V, cxv 6440-6442)
- 3 This word is also written Barvara and Barbara, and often means any barbarous race The Varvaras are generally mentioned in conjunction with the Śakas or Yavanas (Sabhā P, xxxi 1199, Vana P, ccliii 15254, Śānti P, ccvii 7560-61), and from these allusions it appears they were mainly a western or north-western race, but Varvaras were also to be found in the east or north-east of India (Sabhā P, xxix 1088) and seemingly also in the south (Vana P, li 1989) like the Śavaras (Śānti P, lxxv 2429) The name no doubt represents the rolling of the letter r or rough and unknown speech, hence it would be applied to various rude tribes
- 4 This is not in the dictionary The Vāyu Purāna reads Priya-laukikes instead (xlv 118), but I have not found either word elsewhere Chap 55 mentions certain Bhoga-prasthas (verse 42) in the north All these names seem suggestive and may perhaps be equivalents of Utsava-sanketa (people who have no marriage and practice promiscuous intercourse, utsava meaning affection and sanketa, a gesture of invitation) a people mentioned in the M Bh, in the north among the hills (Sabhā P, xxvi 1025) and west (id, xxxi 1191), though also in the south (Bhīṣma P, ix 368), and the Raghu-V, places them in the Himalayas (iv 78) This derivation of Utsava-sanketa is given in a note to the commentary on Raghu-V, iv 77 linked with the Kāmbojas in the north-west (Bhīṣma P, ix 373), they are frequently mentioned among the retinue of Bhagadatta king of Prāgyjyotiṣa, in the east (e.g., Udyoga P, xviii 584-5, see note to verse 44 below) and they were near the sources of the Ganges in the country midway between those regions (Vana P, clxxxviii 12350, Śānti P, ccxxviii 12269-9) The country had a valuable breed of horses (Udyoga P, lxxxv 3049) In the M Bh the Cīnas are always spoken of with respect and even admiration (Udyoga P, xviii 584-5) and one of their king called Dhautamūlaka is classed among eighteen famous ancient kins who extirpated their kinsmen (id, lxxiii 2730), hence Manu's remark that the Cīnas were Kṣatriyas and became degraded because of the extinction of sacred rites (x 43 and 44) betrays the sentiments of a later age The Vāyu Purāna reads Pōnas (xlv 118) erroneously The Rāmāy, mentions also Aparā-cīnas (Kīṣk K, xlv 15), "the further Cīnas"

- 6 For tu kharas and tukhāras The Tukhāras are mentioned in the M Bh (Sabhā P, I 1850) and Rāmāy (Kīṣk K, xlv 15) The Vāyu Purāna reads Tusāras (xlv 118) and they are mentioned in the M Bh (Vana P, li 1991, Śānti P, lxxv 2429) The two names seem to mean the same people They were an outside northern race bordering on the Himalayas (Vana P, clxxxviii 12350) In the Hari Vamśa they are classed along with Sakas, Daradas, Pahlavas and considered to be mlecchas and dasyus (cxv 6440-42), they are ranked with wild hill-tribes as originating from king Vena's sins (v 310-11) and are said to have been repressed by king Sagara (xiv 784) Lassen identifies them with the Tochari and places them on the north side of the Hindu Kush (Ind Alt, map) The Rāmāy has an absurd fable about their origin (Ādi K, lvi 3, see page 257, note)
- 7 Bahulā The Vāyu Purāna reads Pahlavas or Ratna-dhāras instead (xlv 118), probably erroneously, the former have been mentioned in verse 36 I have not met with the latter word elsewhere, but it may be noticed that great quantities of precious stones were found among the Tukhāras and other northern nations (Sabhā P, I 1849-50)
- 8 Vahyato-narāh The Vāna Purāna reads Vāhyatodarāh or ksatodarāh instead (xlv 118) erroneously
- 9 This tribe is mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 376) The Hari-V says that king Randrāsva's ten daughters all married the ṛṣi Prabhā-kara of Atri's race and gave rise to the Ātreyas (xxxii 1660-68), and Ātreyas are mentioned as a family of brāhmanas dwelling in Dvaitavana (M Bh, Vana P, xxvi 971) which was a forest and lake near the Sarasvatī (ibid, clxxvii 12354-62) The Matsya Purāna reads "the Atrīs" (cxiii 43), which is the same Arc they to be identified with the Ātreya gotra of brāhmanas (Risley's Tribes and Castes of Bengal, I 27) formerly living perhaps in Sirmour or Garhwal, or to be connected with R Ātreya (Sabhā P, ix 374) the modern Atrai in North Bengal? The former seems more probable

- 1 Or Bhāradvājas, they are named in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 376) Bharadvāja is often mentioned in the MBh in connection with the upper part of the Ganges near the hills (e.g., Ādi P, cxxx 5102-6, clxvi 6328-32, Vana P, cxxxv 10700-728, and Śalya P, xlix 2762-2824) These were no doubt his descendants, living in Garhwal or Kumaon The name Bharadvāja is given to various caste divisions (Risley's Tribes and Castes of Bengal, I 96)
- 2 The Vāyu (xlv 119) and Matsya (cxiii 43) Purānas read Prasthalas and they are no doubt the same as the Prośakas (Bhīṣma P, ix 376) all being placed in the same connection If Cunningham is right in identifying Lampāka with Lamghan (see second note below), Puškala suggests Puskalāvati or Puškārāvati (Rāmāy, Kīsk K, xliii 23), the ancient capital of Gāndhāra (Anc Geog, I 49), but the Gāndhāras have been mentioned in their proper place is verse 36 above I have not met the name Prośakas any where else

Prasthala was a country closely connected with Trigarta, for Susarman king of Trigarta is also called lord of Prasthala (Virāṭa P, xxx 971, Bhīṣma P, lxxv 3296, lxxxviii 3856, and Drona P, xvii 691) and Trigarta comprised the territory from Amballa and Pattiala to the R Bias (see note to verse 57) Prasthala was also near the Punjab (Drona P, xvii 691, and Karna P, xlv 2063-70) and in the second of these passages its people are classed along with the Punjab nations and all according to the ideas of a later age were pronounced degraded (Muir, Sansk Texts II 482) From these data it seems Prasthala must have been the district between Ferozpur, Pattiala and Sirsa If this position be right, the Prasthalas do not fall into the group of northern peoples named in the text and the correct reading cannot be Prasthalas

- 3 The Vāyu Purāna reads Kaserukas (xlv 119), and the Matsya Daserakas (cxiii 43) I have not met the first form of name elsewhere, but the Daserakas or Dāśerakas or Dāserakas are mentioned as joining in the great war in the MBh, (e.g., Bhīṣma P, I 2080, cxviii 5483, Drona P, xi 397 and xx 798), and they appear to have comprised several bands, as the word gana is nearly always added to the name, but there are no data to identify them
- 4 This name occurs in the MBh, (Drona P, cxxi 4846-7) and there the Lampākas are described as a mountain tribe, like the Daradas and Pulindas, who fought largely with stones and were skilled in slinging stones, but otherwise there are very few references to them in the MBh Lassen identifies Lampāka with the Lambagae and places them south of the Hindu Kush, in modern Kafiristan Cunningham says Lampāka is the modern Lamghan, north-east of Kabul (Anc Geog, I 17 and 27), which agrees with Lassen The Matsya Purāna reads Lampakasi (cxiii 43), no doubt by a mistake

- 5 The Vāyu Purāna reads Stanapas or Tanapas (xlv 119) I have not met any of these names elsewhere, but the latter words resemble the S tana-yośikas (Bhīṣma P, ix 376), and also Tanayas (ibid, 371), whose grouping however is different The Matsya Purāna reads Talagānas (cxiii 43), which seems erroneous Perhaps the Śūlakāras may be identified with the Sunuvārs, a cultivating tribe of Nepal, forming part of the highest class (Risley's Castes and Tribes of Bengal, II 281)
- 6 The Vāyu Purāna reads Piḍikas instead (xlv 119) Chap 55 verse 37 places the Cūlikas in the Tortoise's tail at the western most part of India I have not met with either name elsewhere The Matsya Purāna reads Sainikas (cxiii 43), "Soldiers"
- 7 Or Juguḍas according to the Vāyu Purāna (xlv 119) The Juguḍas are mentioned in the MBh (Vana P, li 1991) The Matsya Purāna reads Jāngalas (cxiii 43), which is of no help for it cannot refer to Kuru-jāngala (see note to Kurus, chap 55, verse 9) and I have not met with any other Jāngala, but the same Purāna mentions the Jaguḍas as a people through whose country the Indus flows, so that they appear to be north or east of Kashmir (cix 46-48)
- 8 The Vāyu Purāna reads Apagas instead (xlv 120) I have not met with either name elsewhere Should the reading be Āpavas, the descendants of Vasīṣṭha? Ātreyas and Bharadvājas have been mentioned and Gālavas are named in verse 57
- 9 Or Ānimadras or Cānimadras The Vāyu Purāna reads Cānimadrās ca (xlv 120) None of these names are in the dictionary and I have not met any of them elsewhere
- 10 The word Kirāta is no doubt the same as the modern names Kirāti and Kirānti, which mean "a native of the Kirānt-des or mountainous country lying between the Dud-kosi and the Karki rivers in Nepal The term includes the Khambu, Limbu and Yākhā tribes, and the Danuār, Hayu and Thāmi also claim to be Kirānti," but their claim is disputed by the first three tribes which are superior (Risley's Castes and Tribes of Bengal, I 490) But formerly they had a much larger range and were spread along the greater part of the southern side of the Himalayas, for Arjuna encountered them in his northern expedition (Sabhā P, xxv 1002), Bhīma in his eastern (id, xxix 1089) and Nakula in his western expedition (id, xxxi 1199) They formed a group of closely allied yet distinct tribes or clans, for two separate Kirāta kings are named (Sabhā P, iv 119 and 120), seven kings are alluded to (id, xxix 1089), "all the Kirātas" are spoken of (Vana P, li 1990) and they are mentioned thrice in the Bhīṣma P, list (ix 358, 364 and 376) Their chief territory was among the mountains Kailāsa, Mandara (see pages 245 note) and Haima (Anusās P, xix 1434), that is, the region around Lake Mānasa They are allied to the Tanganas (see next verse) and Pulindas (see page 259 note) for the three people inhabited one large kingdom ruled by Subāhu, who was king of the Pulindas (Vana P, cxi 10863-6) and is also styled a Kirāta (id, clxxvii

Tāmasas¹ and the Haṁsa-mārgas,² the Kāśmīras³ and the Tungaṇas,⁴ the Śūlikas⁵ and the Kuhakas,⁶ 12349). The tribes differed much in material condition, for some were civilized and open to friendly intercourse (Vana P., cxi 10865-6; and Udyoga P., lxiii. 2470) and others were clad in skins, lived on fruit and roots and were cruel (Sabhā P., li. 1865). Their women were used as slaves (ibid., 1867). The Rāmāy. describes them as wearing thick top-knots (Kishk.-K., xl. 30). Manu's remark that the Kirātas were kṣatriyas and became degraded because of the extinction of sacred rites, (x. 43 and 44) reflects the opinions of a later age.

1. The same people are mentioned again in verse 57, but I have not found the name elsewhere, and it is not in the dictionary. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Tomaras (xlv. 120) and the Bhīṣma P. agrees (ix. 377). The Matsya Purāṇa mentions the Tomaras and the Hamsa-mārgas as two tribes through whose countries flows the R. Pāvani, one of the three large rivers which rise in the middle of the Himalaya mountain system and flow eastward (cxx. 57-59). The river is doubtful, but the passage places the Tomaras and the Haṁsa-mārgas in the east of Tibet.
2. "The duck-fowlers." They are mentioned again in verse 56 and also in the Bhīṣma P. list (ix. 377); and seem to be the same as the Haṁsa-padas (Droṇa P., xx. 798) and perhaps Haṁsa-kāyanas (Sabhā P., li. 1870); but there appear to be no data to identify them, except that they were a people in eastern Tibet as explained in the last note.
3. The people of Kashmir. They are named twice in the Bhīṣma P. list (ix. 361 and 375).
4. Or better, as the Vāyu Purāṇa reads, Tangaṇas (xlv. 120) the Rāmāy. calls them Tankaṇas (Kishk. K., xlv. 20). They were a mountain tribe and are mentioned rather often in the M.Bh., where two sections are spoken of, the Tangaṇas and Para-tangaṇas (Sabhā P., li. 1859; Bhīṣma P., ix. 372; and I. 2083), that is, "the nearer" and "the further" Tangaṇas. They were intermixed with the Kirātas and Pulindas (or Kulindas), for they all inhabited a large kingdom ruled over by Subāhu, which was in the middle portion of the Himalayas (Vana P., cxi. 10863-5; Sabhā P., li. 1858-9); and they are also linked with the Ambaṣṭhas (Droṇa P., cxxi. 4819). They area said to have occupied the upper part of the valley of the R. Sarayū (dict.). Like other hill tribes they fought largely with stones and were skilled in slinging stones (Droṇa P., cxxi. 4835-47).
5. This resembles Śūlakāras in the last verse. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Cūlikas (xlv. 121), which has also been mentioned in that verse. The Śūlikas are mentioned in the Matsya Purāṇa as a people through whose country flows the R. Cakṣu, one of the three large rivers which rise in the middle of the Himalaya mountain system and flow westward (cxx. 45, 46) Cakṣu may perhaps be meant for Vakṣu, which is the Oxus; if so, the Śūlikas would be a people on the Oxus in Turkestan.
6. Kuhaka means a juggler. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Cāhukas or Ahukas or Āhukas (xlv. 121); Āhuka was the name of a family of the Andhakas (e.g., M.Bh., Udyoga P., lxxxv. 3041; and Hari V., xxxviii. 2017-24), but they were in the west and cannot be meant here. I have not met with any of these words elsewhere as the name of a people in the north. The proper reading may be Kuhukas. Kuhuka would be the same as Kuhu and the Kuhus are mentioned in the Matsya Purāṇa as a people on the line of the Indus (cxx. 46-48).

7. These people are mentioned again in verse 57. A country Ūṇa-deśa is placed by Lassen on the Sutlej north of Garhwal (Ind. Alt., map). The whole of the upper Sutlej valley is now called Nari-khorsum or Hun-des. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Pūrṇas here (xlv. 121), which seems erroneous.
8. These appear to be the same as the Dārvas in verse 57. They were a northern people and are generally associated with the Trigartas and Daradas (Sabhā P., xxvi. 1026; and li. 1869) and other tribes in the north of the Punjab (Bhīṣma P., ix. 362). A river or town called Darvi is mentioned (ibid.), and a tirtha Darvi-sankramaṇa is placed between the sources of the Jumna and Indus (Vana P., lxxxiv. 8022-4); and this tract perhaps was their territory. But Lassen places the Dārvas between the Indus and Jhelam in the north-west of Kashmir (Ind. Atl., map).
9. This seems incorrect. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Andhravākas (xlv. 122), which is hardly acceptable, the Andhras being properly in the South, rather than in the East and being presumably intended in verse 48 (see note to Andhas). The Matsya Purāṇa reads Angā vangā instead (cxxiii. 44), which is preferable, but these nations are mentioned below (see page 261 note and page 262 note).
10. The Matsya Purāṇa reads Madgurakas (cxxiii. 44), and the Vāyu Sujarakas (xlv. 122). I have not found any of these names elsewhere, except that Madguras, "divers", are mentioned in a totally different connection in the Hari-Vaṁśa (xcv. 5233-9). Seemingly the word should be connected with Modāgiri in the Eastern region where a kingdom once existed (M.Bh., Sabhā P., xxix. 1095); is it to be identified with the modern Mungir (commonly Monghyr) on the Ganges in Bihar, where there is a small outcrop of hills. Cunningham says Mudgala-puri, Mudgalāśrama (to which the Matsya Purāṇa reading approximates) and Mudga-giri were the old names of Mungir; and an earlier name was Kaṣṭha-haraṇa-parvata (XV. 15 and 18), but this last is open to the objection that no name can well be older than that preserved in the M.Bh., The Mudgalas are mentioned in Droṇa P., xi. 397.

Antargiryas,¹ the Vahu-giras² and the Pravangas³ also, the Rangeyas,⁴ the Manadas,⁵ the Māna-vartikas,⁶ the Brahmottaras,⁷ the

- 1 Or Antar-giri as the Matsya Purāna reads (cxiii 44) They are mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 357) The name, no doubt, means "those who dwell amid the hills," and as the people are placed in all these passages in proximity to the Angas, it seems reasonable to identify Antargiri with the Rajmahal hills (in the modern district of the Santhal Parganas) which form a marked natural division between Anga and Vanga. In the only other passage where I have found this name (Sabhā P, xxvii 1012) Antargiri, Vahirgiri (see next note) and Upagiri are mentioned in obvious, contradiction and are placed in the Northern region, it is doubtful, therefore, whether they denote the tracts mentioned here, and they may perhaps refer to some portion of the slopes of the Himalayas.
- 2 Or Vahirgiri as the Matsya Purāna reads (cxiii 44) The name, no doubt, means "those who dwell outside the hills," and these people are mentioned along with the Angas and Malajas in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 357) If we may identify Antargiri with the Rajmahal hills (see the last note), Vahirgiri might well designate the outskirts of those hills bordering on Anga, that is, the southern portions of the Bhagalpur and Monghyr districts and the lands bordering thereon to the south in the Santhal Parganas and Hazaribagh.
- 3 I have not met this name elsewhere, though it is stated in the dictionary to be the name of a people and analysed thus Pravam-ga=Plavam-ga, I would suggest, however, that it should be read here as Pra-vangas, "those who are in front of the Vangas," i.e., the Angas. The Matsya Purāna reads Angas and Vangas (cxiii 44) The Angas are clearly meant. Anga was a distinct and settled country in early times and its princes were allied with Aryan royal families (M Bh, Ādi P, xcv 3772 and 3777, and Rāmāy., Ādi K x 1-10) This people are said to have been so called after an eponymous king Anga, he, Vanga, Kalinga, Pundra and Suhma are described with considerable circumstantial detail as the five sons of king Bali's queen (Bali being king of the Eastern region) by the ṛṣi Dīrgha-tamas (M Bh, Ādi P, civ 4217-21, and Hari-V, xxxi 1684-93) Anga comprised the modern districts of Bhagalpur and Monghyr, excluding the extreme north and south portions. The ancient name Anga dropped out of use and Bihar (of Buddhist origin) has usurped its place. The word Pra-vanga here significant of the change? The capital was first called Mālinī and that name is said to have been superseded by the name Campā in honour of a king Campa, Loma-pāda's great grandson (Hari-V, xxxi 1699 and 1700 and M Bh, Śānti P, v 134-5), but the Rāmāyana makes a punning connection between this name and the groves of campaka trees around the town (Ādi K, xvii 23), it is the modern Bhagalpur on the south bank of the Ganges (Vana P, lxxxv 8156) The tract near Campā was called Sūta-viśaya (Vana P, cccvii 17150-51), that is, "the land of birds or chariotcers." The Angas are mentioned twice in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 353 and 357), it does not appear why.
- 4 This is, no doubt, a mistake for Vangeyas which the Vāyu Purāna reads (xlv 122) and Vangas which the Matsya mentions (cxiii 44) The Vangas or Vangeyas were the people of Vanga or Banga, the original of the modern Bengal. Vanga was a distinct country in early times and is frequently mentioned, though the references to it very rarely convey any definite information. It lay beyond Anga, to the south-east, and was connected with Kalinga, for the Angas, Vanga and Kalingas are constantly linked together as people closely allied by race and position (e.g., Drona P, lxx 2436) And the Vangas are said to have been so called after an eponymous king Vanga who was Anga's and Kalinga's brother (see last note). Vanga comprised the northern portion of Western and Central Bengal, i.e., the modern districts of Birbhum, Moorshedabad, Bardwan and Nuddea. Its capital in early times does not appear to be mentioned. In later times the name was extended over the whole of Central Bengal, for the Raghu Vamśa describes the Vangas as dwelling in the islands of the Ganges delta, warring chiefly in boats, and transplanting their rice seedlings into the fields just as at the present day (iv 36, 37). In those early times the upper part of the delta consisted of numerous islands separated by large rivers and the southern part could not have been formed.

- 5 The Vāyu Purāna reads Māladās (xlv 122) which appears preferable, and this may mean the people of the modern district of Maldah, in which the old cities of Gaur and Pandua are situated, while the town Maldah itself is old (Cunningham, Arch Surv Repts, XV 77) The Māladās are mentioned as an eastern people in the M Bh, (Sabhā P, xxix 1081-2, and also Drona P, vii 183), but without data enough to say where they were.
- 6 The Vāyu Purāna reads Māla-vartinah (xlv 122) The M Bh mentions the Māna-varjakas (Bhīṣma P, ix 357) and they appear from the content to be the people meant here. The name seems intended to carry a meaning, either "people who live decorously" according to the text, or "people who are devoid of decorum" according to the last word. Does it refer to a wild tribe in a state of nature? Or does Māna-vartika (Mana-vartin) mean Mān-bhūm (Māna-bhūmi) a district in West Bengal? The Mālavānakas mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 367) belong to a different group altogether.
- 7 The Matsya Purāna reads Suhmottaras (cxiii 44), which is preferable. This means the "people north of Suhma." Suhma was a well-known country. It was generally classed with Pundra (e.g., M Bh, Ādi P, cxiii 4453) and both of them are declared to be closely allied to Anga, Vanga and Kalinga by being derived from five eponymous kings of those names who were brothers (M Bh, Ādi P, civ 4217-21, Hari-Vamśa, xxxi 1684-93) Suhma was near the sea (Sabhā P, xxix 1099 and Raghu-V, ix 34 and 35) and Dāma-lipta (Tāmra-lipta, the modern Tamruk, see next verse) is said to be within its borders in the Dasa-kumāra-carita (story of Mitra-gupta) Suhma therefore corresponded with the modern district of Midnapur and Bankura and perhaps also Purulia and Manbhum in West Bengal. Sumottara would be the tract north of that, and was probably the same as Pra-suhma (Sabhā P, xxix 1090) The Mahyuttaras of the Bhīṣma

Pravijayas,¹ the Bhārgavas,² the Jñeya-mallakas³ and the Prāgyyotisas⁴ and the Madras⁵ and the

P, list (ix 358) seem to be the same people under an error in the spelling

The reading Sumottarāh, however, is hardly satisfactory in omitting the Suhmas and referring indefinitely to the people north of them and I would suggest that the proper reading should be Suhmotkalāh, "the Suhmas and Utkalas." The Utkalas were well-known (though not I believe mentioned not appear to have had any close affinities with the races around them and the Hari-Vamsa throws their origin back to the fabulous time of Ilā (x 631-2) Their territory reached on the east the R Kapisa (Raghu V, iv 38), which Lassen identifies with the modern Subarna-rekhā near the northern the river Cossyc in Midnapore (see page 251 note), and on the west they touched the Mekalas, for the two people are coupled together in the M Bh (Bhīṣma P, ix 348, see also Drona P, iv 122 and Karna-P, xxii 882) and Rāmāy (Kīṣhik - K xli 14) and the Mekalas were the inhabitants of the Mekala hills, i e, the hills bounding Chhattisgarh on the west and north Northward dwelt the Pundras and southward the Kalingas Hence Utkala comprised the southern portion of Chuta Nagpur, the northern Tributary States of Orissa and the Balasore district Various derivations have been suggested of the name Utkala, but I would only draw attention to some of the above passages where Utkala and Mekala are placed together as if their names possessed something in common See also in verse 53

- 1 The Matsya Purāna reads the same (cxiii 44) but I have not found them mentioned elsewhere They appear from the context to be the same as the Prāvṛṣeyas of the Bhīṣma P list (ix 358)
- 2 These are mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 358) and were perhaps an off-lying branch of the Bhārgava race in the East, see note to verse 35 The Hari-Vamsa mentions a prince called Bhārga or Bhārgava, who founded Bhṛgubhūmi or Bhārga-bhūmi, and as he was a grandson of Divodāsa king of Benares, his country may perhaps have been in the Eastern region (xxix 1587 and 1597, and xxxii 1753) The Bhīṣma P list names also Bhārgas here (loc cit)
- 3 The Vāyu Purāna reads Geyamarthakas (xlv 123) and the Matsya Geyamālavas (cxiii 44) and the Bhīṣma P list omits the corresponding name (see ix 358) None of these names are in the dictionary and I have not met any of them elsewhere
- 4 Prāgyyotisā was a famous kingdom in early times and is often mentioned in the M Bh The references to it, however, are rather perplexing, for in some passages it is called a Mleccha kingdom ruled over by king Bhagadatta, who is always spoken of in respectful and even eulogistic terms (e g, Sabhā-P, xxv 1000-1, and 1 1834, Udyoga P, clxvi 5804, and Karna P, v 104-5) and in other passages it is called a Dānava or Asura kingdom ruled over by the demons Naraka and Muru (Vana P, xii 488, Udyoga P, xlvii 1887-92, Hari-V, cxxi 6791-9, cxxiii 6873 etc, and clxxiv 9790, and Annotations to Kīṣhik K, xliii in Goire's Rāmāyana), while in some other passages the allusions seem mixed (e g, Sabhā P, xiii

578-80, which seems to call Bhagadatta a Yavana, and as to this, see id 1 1834-6) The second class of passages occur, I believe, only in descriptions of Krna's exploits, they are spoilt by hyperbolic laudation and are probably later than the first class Prāgyyotisā was placed in the North region (Sabhā P, xxv 1000, and Vana P, ccliii 15240-2), but was also considered to be in the East as in the text here North of it seemingly lay tracts called Antargiri, Vahirgiri and Upagiri (Sabhā P, xxv 1000-xxvi 1012) which appear to be the lower slopes of the Himalayas and the Terai, and it was close to the mountains for Bhagadatta is called Saṅgālaya (Strī P, xxiii 644) It bordered on the Kīrātas and Cīnas for they formed his retinue (Sabhā P, xxv 1002, Udyoga P, xviii 584-5) He also drew his troops from among the people who dwelt in the marshy regions near the sea, Sāgarānūpa (Sabhā P, xxv 1002, xxxiii 1268-9, and Karna P, v 104-5) and it is even said he dwelt at the Eastern Ocean (Udyoga P, iii 74), these marshy regions can only be the alluvial tracts and islands near the mouths of the Ganges and Brahmaputra as they existed anciently These data indicate that Prāgyyotisā comprised the whole of North Bengal proper The Raghu Vamsa places it seemingly beyond the Brahmaputra (iv 81), but Kālidāsa was a little uncertain in distant geography Its capital was called Prāgyyotisā also Although the people were mlecchas, the Rāmāyana ascribes the founding of this kingdom of Amūrta-rajās, one of the four sons of a great king Kusā (Ādi K, xxxv 1-6) Amūrta-rayas, as the name is generally written in the M Bh, is mentioned there simply as father of the famous king Gaya (e g, Vana P, xcv 8528-39, and Drona P, lxxvi 2334)

- 5 This seems an impossible name here (see verse 36) The Vāyu Purāna reads Muṇḍas instead (xlv 123) which is permissible The Muṇḍas are a large Drāviḍian tribe in Chuta Nagpur (Risley's Tribes and Castes of Bengal, II 101) and are named in the M Bh, (Bhīṣma P, lvi 2410) The Matsya Purāna however reads Pundras instead (cxiii 45) and the Bhīṣma P list also mentions them in this region (ix 358) This is the best reading, for the Pundras were held to be closely allied to the Angas Vangas and Suhmas (see page 261 note, page 262 note and above note) and should rightly be placed here along with those races, rather than in the South according to verse 45 The name occurs in various forms, Pundraka (Sabhā P, iv 119), Paundra (Ādi P, clxxxvii 7020), Paundrika (Ādi P, clxxxvi 6992, Sabhā P, xxxii 1270) and Paundrika (Sabhā P, li 1872) They appear to be used often as if equivalent (e g, Sabhā P, xiii 584) and yet a distinction seems to be made between Pundras and Paundras for they are separately mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 358 and 365), and Pundras, Pundrakas and Paundrikas are all mentioned in one passage (Sabhā P, li 1872-4) All, however, appear to have composed one people and they were not a barbarous nation From the arrangements of names and descriptions given in various passages (Ādi P, cxiii 4453, Sabhā P, xiii 584, xxix 1091-7, Vana P, li 1988, Āśvamedh P, lxxxiii 2464-5) it appears the Pundras had the Kāśis on their north, the Angas, Vangas and Suhmas on their north-east and east, and the Oḍras on their south-east, hence their territory corresponded to the modern Chuta Nagpur with the exception of its southern portions. Their bounds on the south were no doubt the land of the Utkalas (see page 263 note). In one passage (Ādi P, lxvii 2679) it is stated an ancient king Ballina reigned over both Paundra and Matsya, this suggests that their territory extended to near the river Chambal anciently (see page 254 note), and tends to part them from the Anga Vangas

1 Videha was a famous country in early times. Cunningham says it appears to have comprised the northern portion of North Bihar from the river Gandak to the river Kausiki or Kosi (Arch Surv Repts, XVI 34 and map), but its western boundary was the Saṅgāra (see page 248 note) and it seems Videha extended from the Rapti to the Kosi. Northwards it extended close to the Himalayas and on the south it was bounded by a kingdom, the capital of which was Vaiśālī (Rāmāy, Ādi K, xlv 10-11, and xlviii 21-25) or the modern Besnahr which is about 27 miles north of Patna (Arch Surv Repts, I 55, and XVI 6 and 34). The capital was Mithilā (Rāmāy, Ādi K, xlix 9-16, and M Bh, Sānti P, ccxxvii 12233-8) and this name often designated the country itself, especially in the Rāmāyana. The people were called Vidhas (or Videgha, as the earlier form was, see Śata-P Brāh I lv 14) and also Mithilas (Vana P, ccliii 15243). Its kings, who were often highly educated (Sānti P, ccxxvii 12215-25), are generally called Janaka, which seems to have been the ordinary royal title (Vana P, cxxxiii 10637). Cunningham says the capital was Janakpur, which is now a small town just within the Nepal border, north of where the Muzaffarpur and Darbhanga districts meet (Arch Surv Repts, XVI 34 and map), but I have not met this name in Sanskrit works.

2 Or Tāmra-liptas. The country and people are often mentioned in the M Bh, and both forms of the name are used (Ādi P, clxxxvi 6993, Sabhā P, xxix 1098, and Drona P, lxx 2436). The name was modified into Tāma-liptaka which the Vāyu Purāna reads (xlv 125) and Tāma-lipta (which occurs in chap 55, verse 14) and Dāma-lipta (see story of Mitragupta in the Dasa-kumāra-carita) and corrupted into the modern Tamluk. The town Tamluk is in the Midnapur district near the mouth of the Rupnarayan River. It used to be a famous port during the middle ages of Indian history. The country Tāmra-liptaka corresponded therefore to the eastern part of the present district of Midnapur.

3 The Vāyu Purāna reads Mālas (xlv 123). This people appear to be the Māles (properly Māls) and Māl Pahāryas, two Drāviḍian tribes which now inhabit the Rājmahall and Rāngarh hills in Western Bengal (Risley's Tribes and Castes of Bengal, II 51 and 66). The Matsya Purāna reads Sālvas (cxiii 45) erroneously.

4 Or Māgadhas. Magadha comprised the present districts of Gaya and Patna. It was a famous kingdom from the earliest times. The Rāmāyana says it was founded by Vasu one of the four sons of a great king Kuśa (Ādi-K, xxxv 1-9) and M Bh says it was established by Vṛhad-ratha who was son of Vasu king of Cedi (Ādi P, lxiii 2361-5 and Hari-V, xxxii 1805), but who is also called an Anga (Sānti P, xxix 921-31). One appears to be an eastern account and the other a western account, but there may be truth in both accounts for there was an interval of eight or twelve generations between the two periods spoken of. Both agree that Girivraja was made the capital by the founder of the kingdom, the former says by Vasu (loc cit), and the latter says by Vṛhad-ratha (Hari-V, cxvii 6598, Sabhā P, xx 798-800). Cunningham has identified Girivraja with the modern Giryek on the Panchana river about 36 miles north-east of Gaya (Arch Surv Repts, I 16 and plate iii). Rājagṛha appears to have been another name of the capital (Ādi P, cxiii 4451-2, and Āsvamedh P, lxxxii 2435-63), but Cunningham identifies it with the modern Raj-gir about 6 miles west of Giryek (Arch Surv Repts, I 20 and plate iii). The oldest name of this country is said to have been Kikata, which occurs in Rgveda III 53 14 (Muir's Sansk Texts, II 362, 363).

Now the other peoples who dwell in the Southern Region⁷ are the Pundras⁸ and

5 The Vāyu Purāna reads Govindas (xlv 123), and the Matsya Govardhas (cxiii 45), and the latter people are mentioned in chap 55, verse 23, but are placed in the South. I have not met with an Eastern people of any of these names elsewhere.

6 The Kūrma Purāna adds Kāma-rūpa (xlvii 38), the modern Kamrup or Gauhati in Assam. It is mentioned in the Raghu-Vamsa (iv 84), but not, I believe, in the Rāmāyana nor Mahābhārata.

7 Dakṣṇāpatha, this generally means South India below the Vindhya Range and a line from Amara-kaṅṅaka to the north of Orissa.

8 This seems to be erroneous, for the Pundras were not properly in the South and they have been noticed in their appropriate place in the East (see page 264 note). The Vāyu Purāna reads Pāṇḍyas instead (xlv 124) and so also the Matsya (cxiii 46) and this is, no doubt, the proper reading, for otherwise this nation, which was the most famous and best known in the South, would be omitted from this list. Pāṇḍya is often mentioned in the M Bh, but not in the Rāmāyana, except in the geographical canto (Kiṣk K, xli 15 and 25) which is probably an addition to the original poem. It comprised the modern districts of Madura and Tinnevel. The capital was Mathurā, the

Kevalas¹ and Go-lāngulas² also, the Śailūsas³ and Mūsikas,⁴ the Kusumas,⁵ the Nāma-vasakas,⁶ the modern Madura The Pāṇḍyas belong the Drāviḍian family, but the Hari-Vamsa makes them, or more probably the royal house, descendants of the Paurava race, it says Pāṇḍya, Kerala, Kola and Cola were four brothers and gave origin to the four peoples of those names (xxxii 1832-6)

1 This is, no doubt, a mistake for Keralas, which the Vāyu (xlv 124) and Matsya (cxiii 46) Purānas read, and the Bhīṣma P list twice (ix 352 and 365, though the first mention is probably a mistake) They were a forest tribe (Sabhā P, xxx 1174-5) and are placed on the west side by the Raghu-Vamsa (iv 53-54) They are said to be descended from an eponymous king Kerala, and to be closely allied to the Pāṇḍyas, Colas, in the Hari-Vamsa (xxxii 1836) They appear to have occupied the whole of the west coast from Calicut to Cape Comorin

2 "The Cow-tails," a pure fancy, stories of tailed races being common all over the world It may correspond to Gonarddas in chap 55, verse 23, but the Matsya Purāna reads Colas and Kulyas (cxiii 46) and the Vāyu Caulyas and Kulyas (xlv 124), and the proper reading should, no doubt, be Colas and Kolas The Hari-Vamsa makes these two tribes closely allied to the Pāṇḍyas and Keralas (see the last two notes)

Cola was a kingdom in early times (Sabhā P, li 1891 3) and is often mentioned in the M Bh, (e g, Vana P, li 1988, and Sabhā P, xxx 1174, where Codra is, no doubt, a mistake for Cola, also Bhīṣma P, ix 367, and Drona P, xi 398) The Hari-Vamsa says king Sagara degraded them (xiv 784) Cola comprised the modern districts of Tanjore Trichinopoly, Pudukota and South Arcot

The Kolas are scarcely ever mentioned, yet they appear to be referred to in Sabhā P, xxx 1171 and Āsvamedh P, lxxxiii 2476-7 Their position is uncertain Are they to be identified with the Koravas or Kurrus, who are a vagrant tribe in Madras (Madras Census of 1891, Report, p 304)

3 Chap 55 verse 20 mentions the Śailikas, and the Vāyu Purāna (xlv 125) and Matsya (cxiii 47) read Setukas I have not found any of these names elsewhere, but Saila occurs in Vana P, ccliii 15250, perhaps as the name of a country near Pāṇḍya in the extreme south, so that Sailikas might mean its people Does Setuka refer to Rāma's setu or Adam's bridge and mean the people who live close to it?

4 The Bhīṣma P list mentions these people in the same connection (ix 366) and another Southern people called Mūsakas twice (ix 366 and 371) Chap 55 mentions instead of them the Rśikas in the South (verse 27) and the Mūsikas in the south-east (verse 16) I have not found the latter name elsewhere, but the Rśikas appear to have been well-known, there being one people of the name in the North (Sabhā P, xxvi 1033-6, Rāmāy, Kīśk K, xlv 13, and Matsya Purāna cxx 53) and another in the South (Kīśk K, xli 16, and Hari-V, cxix 6724-6) The Matsya Purāna reads Sūtikas (cxiii 47) which appears to be erroneous

5 Chap 55 omits this people and names Kumuda hill (verse 26) The Vāyu Purāna reads Kumanas (xlv 125) and the Matsya Kupathas (cxiii 47) I have not found any of these names elsewhere Probably the reading should be Kurumbas or Kurubas The ancient Kurumbas or Pallavas occupied a territory which comprised the modern districts of Madras, Chingleput, North and South Arcot, Salem and the south-east portion of Mysore, with Kañci, the modern Conjeeveram, for their capital, and their power attained its zenith about the 7th century A D, or perhaps a century or two later After their overthrow they were scattered far and wide and are numerous now in most of the districts south of the R Kistna in the middle and eastern parts of the Madras Presidency and in Mysore (Madras Census of 1891, Report, pp 259 and 289)

Mahā-rāstras,⁷ Māhisakas⁸ and

6 This is, no doubt, the same as the Vana-vāsakas of the Bhīṣma P list (ix 366), with which the Vāyu Purāna agrees in reading Vana-vāsikas (xiv 25) As this name simply means Forest-dwellers, it may include several races, who inhabited the great Southern forests, or it may denote the people of the kingdom called Vana-vasin, which was founded by Śārasa in the Dekhan (Hari-V, xcvi 5213 and 531-3) Perhaps they may be identified with the Banjāris or Lambādis, who are the great travelling traders of South India and who are supposed to be descendants of Bālin and Sugrīva the Vānara king in the Rāmāyana (Madras Census of 1891, Report, pp 186 and 279) The Matsya Purāna reads Vāji-vāsikas (cxiii 47), which seems erroneous

7 The people of Mahārāstras, the modern Maharashtra, whom chap 55, also considers to be in the South (Verse 23) The name is a late one as I have not found it in the Mahābhārata or Rāmāyana It was a large kingdom in Huen Tsang's time in the 7th century A D, and Cunningham makes it comprise nearly the western half of the Dekhan between the 16th and 20th parallels of latitude, with its capital at Kalyāni (Anc Geog of India, I 553)

The Matsya Purāna reads Nava-vāstras (cxiii 47), but not well, for this country and people are mentioned in the M-Bh, as one of the kingdoms near the Kurus and as situated in the south-west of Madhya-deśa or on the borders of Rajputana (Sabhā P, xxx 1110 and Virāta P, i 11-12), and the Hari-Vamsa derives them from an eponymous king Nava, making him and the progenitors of the Yaudheyas, Ambasthas and Sivas (which were tribes in or near the Punjab) all sons of king Usīnara (xxxii 1674-8) Nava-rāstras therefore out of place here

8 So also in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 366) or Māhisikas as the Matsya Purāna reads (cxiii 47) These people are, no doubt, the same as the Māhisimakas (Āsvamedh p, lxxxiii 2475-7), that is, the people of Mahīmatī Mahīmatī was an ancient and famous city (Sabhā P, xxx 1125-63) and was situated on the R Narmadā, at a place where the Vindhya and the Rśa Mts (the Satpura range) contract the valley (Hari-V, xcvi 5218) Mucukunda was its founder according to that passage, and Mahīmat according to another (id xxxiii 1846-7) Their descendant was the great Arjuna Kārtavīrya (ibid 1850-xxxiv 1890) Mahīmatī is identified with the modern Maheswar on the Narmadā in the Imp Gaz of India (Vol X, p 329), but this hardly agrees with the notices in

Kalinga¹ on all sides,² Ābhūtas³ and Vaiśīkyas,⁴ Ādhakyas,⁵ and the Śavaras,⁶ the Pulindas,⁷ the

Vindhya-mauleyas,⁸ the people of Vīdarbhā⁹ and Sanskrit writings, for Maheswar must have lain within the ancient Avanti (see verse 52) and Avanti was held to be sometimes in the South and sometimes in the West, whereas Māhismattī is never, I believe, placed anywhere but in the South. A more easterly position, such as Mandhātā or near there, seems better. At the time of the great war its king was Nīla and his people were called Līlayudhas (Udyoga P. xviii 592-3) or Nīlāyudhas (Bhīṣma P. lvi 2414). Its people were afterwards declared to have become degraded because of the extinction of sacred rites (Anusās-P., xxxiii 2103-4, Muir's Sanskrit Texts, I 177). A Māhismattī, which seems to be a river, is mentioned in the Rāmāy in this region (Kīsk K., xli 16).

1. Oī Kālingas. Kalinga was an ancient kingdom, its kings were famous (Ādi P., lxxvii 2701) and its princesses married into the Aryan royal families (e.g., Ādi P., xcv 3774-5, 3780, and Sānti P., iv). Its people were closely allied to the Aṅgas and Vāṅgas and the three nations are often linked together (e.g., Ādi P., ccxv 7820, and Drona P. lxx 2436) and this connection is emphasized by the allegation that these three and also the Suhmas and Puṅdras were descended from five eponymous brothers (see page 262 note). Kalinga comprised all the Eastern coast between the Utkalas on the north (Raghu V., iv 38) and the Telingas or Telugus on the south. The R. Vaitaraṇī (the modern Byturni) flowed through it and the Mahendia Mts. (the Eastern Ghats) were within its southern limits (Ādi P., ccxv 7820-24, and Raghu V., iv 38-43). Kalinga therefore comprised the modern province of Orissa and the district of Ganjam and probably also that of Vizagapatam. The Matsya Purāna makes Kalinga extend as far west as the Amara-kantaka hills (clxxxv 12), but Kalinga there is no doubt, an error for Kosala. Certain Kalingas have been mentioned in verse 37 above.
2. Sarvasah. This seems to be rather a stereotyped phrase. The Matsya Purāna also reads the same (cxiii 47). Pūrvasah would be a preferable reading, for the Kalingas occupied a large part of the Eastern coast and do not appear to have inhabited any other part of the Dekhan.
3. These may have been an off-lying branch of this aboriginal race (see note to verse 35). The Vāyu Purāna reads Abhiras here (xlv 126). The Matsya Purāna reads Kārūsas (cxiii 48), they are the same as the Karūsas mentioned in verse 53. They come in their proper position there and are out of place here.
4. This is not in the dictionary. For saha vaiśīkhyā read either one word or saha vaiśīkyair. The Vāyu (xlv 126) and Matsya (cxiii 48) Purānas read Esikas or Aśikas, but I have not found any of these names elsewhere.
5. I have not met this name elsewhere and it is not in the dictionary. The Vāyu Purāna (xlv 126) and the Matsya (cxiii 48) read Ātavayas and this may mean either forest-dwellers or more probably "the people of Āṭavī," which is mentioned as a city in the Dekhan, but without any data to identify it (Sabhā P., xxx 1176).
6. The Śavaras are an aboriginal tribe, according to some Drāviḍian and according to others Kolarian. They are mentioned rarely in the M Bh (Sānti P., lxx 2429, clxviii 6294-6303, clxxiii 6445, and ccvii 7559-61) and Rāmāy (Ādi-K., i 59, Aranya-K., lxxvii 6-32). They are represented in these passages as dwelling in Central India and the Dekhan, as being wicked Dasyus and as practising evil customs. They are still found scattered about in those parts and also towards Orissa, under the names Sabar, Saur, Suir. In the Madras Presidency they are found chiefly in the Ganjam and Vizagapatam districts (Madras Census of 1891 Report, p. 254). "The Savars believe their original condition to have been that of a wandering tribe, roaming through the hills of Orissa and Chota Nagpur, living on the fruits of the forest and acknowledging the rule of no recognized chief" (Risley's Castes and Tribes of Bengal, I 241-246), and this belief agrees, if we extend their range, with the earliest notices of them. See also Cunningham, Arch. Surv. Repts., XVII and XX.

7. These people are mentioned again in verse 50 as being also in the West and there appears to have been a Northern branch of them in the Himalayas (see page 258 note). This Southern branch seems from the M Bh to have occupied the middle portion of the Dekhan (Sabhā P., xxx 1120, and Bhīṣma P., ix 369, and Rāmāy, Kīsk K., xli 17) and extended eastward where they had a great city (Sabhā P., xxviii 1068). They were an aboriginal tribe, for they were mlecchas (Vana P. clxxxviii 12838-40) they became out-castes from not seeing brāhmanas (Anusās P., xxxiii 2104-5), they are called wicked and are said to have practised evil customs (Sānti P., ccvii 7559-61). The Vāyu Purāna reads Pulindras (xlv 126) erroneously.
8. The Vāyu Purāna reads Vindhya-mūlikas (xlv 126), which is synonymous, "those who dwell at the foot of the Vindhya mountains", or "the aborigines of the Vindhya mountains." I have not met this name as describing any particular people and taken in its general meaning it would include the races mentioned in verses 53-55 below but perhaps it may be read as an adjective to "Pulindas." The Matsya Purāna reads Vindhya-pusikas (cxiii 48), which seems erroneous.
9. Vīdarbhā was one of the most ancient and renowned kingdoms in the Dekhan (Vana P., xcvi and xcvi). It comprised the valley of the Payoṇi, the modern Purna and the middle portion of the Tapti (see page 250 note and Vana P., cxx 10289-90) and corresponded to the western part of the modern Berar and the valley-country west of that. It is said to have been founded by a king Vīdarbhā who built a city called Vīdarbhā (Hari V., ccvii 6588 and 6605-8, and Vana P., lxxii), which seems to have been the same as Kundina the capital (Vana P. lxxii, and Hari V., civ 5800-7, cxviii 6661-2). Its most famous king was Bhīṣmaka, who held the title "king of the Dekhan" (id. cxvii 6590-1). The people were Bhojas (Udyoga P., xlvii 1881) or perhaps only the royal family was so called (id., clvii 5350-1, Sabhā P., xiii 585-8) and so also in the Raghu-Vamśa with reference to a period many generations anterior (vi 59 and 69, and vii). The name Bhoja seems to have more than one application, for the Bhojas together with the Andhakas and Vṛṣnis belonged to the Yādava race (Hari V., xciv 5181-5204) and the name appears to have been applied also in a much wider sense to Kṣatriya descended from Yayāti (Sabhā P., xiii. 566-71).

the Daṇḍakas,¹ the Paurikas² and the Maulikas,³ the Aśmakas,⁴ Bhoga-varḍhanas,⁵ Naiśikas,⁶ Kuntalas,⁷ Andhas,⁸ Udbhidhas,⁹ Vana-dārakas;¹⁰

1. The Daṇḍakas are mentioned in the M.Bh. (Sabhā P., xxx. 1169) and were the inhabitants of the the forest region called Daṇḍakāraṇya. Daṇḍaka originally was the name of the immense forest, where Rāma went in banishment and which is described in the Rāmāyaṇa as covering the whole of Central India from Bundelkhan on the north to southward of the Godāvarī (Journal, R.A.S., 1894, p. 241); but as this forest was gradually cleared away by the spread of the Aryan colonies, its limits diminished till at last Daṇḍaka denoted only the country around the sources of the Godāvarī and lower part of the Tapti (M. Bh., Sabhā P., xxx. 1169; Vana P., lxxxv. 8183-4). It could only have been at this stage that its inhabitants could well have been described by the name Daṇḍakas and it is not doubt the people of that moderate area who are meant here. To account for the name the Hari-Varṣa has provided as eponymous king Daṇḍaka who made Daṇḍakāraṇya (x. 637-9).
2. The people of Purikā. This may be either the famous town Puri in Orissa, or the town Purikā which Mucukunda is said to have built on the northern slope of the Rkṣa Mts. in the kingdom of Māhīsmatī (Hari V., xc. 5220-3); but the latter seems more probable, judging from the context. For Māhīsmatī, see page 265 note. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Paunikas, (xlv. 127); is this to be connected with Poonah, south-east of Bombay? I have not met it elsewhere.
3. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Maunikas (xlv. 127); and Mauliyas are mentioned in Sabhā P., li. 1871; but I have not found any of these names elsewhere.
4. This as a people is not in the dictionary. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Asmakas (xlv. 127), but Aśmaka seems to be the proper form. These people are mentioned in the Rāmāy. (Kīṣk. K., xli. 17) and M.Bh. (Droṇa P., xxxvii. 1605-8); and are placed in the middle of India by chap. 55, verse 7. They may have been the descendants of Aśmaka, who was the son of King Kalmāsa-pāda Saudāsa's queen Madyanti by Vasiṣṭha (Ādi P., cxxii. 4736-7; and clxxvii. 6777-91) and who founded the town Paudanya (ibid., 679). A queen Aśmaki is mentioned in the Lunar line (id., xc. 3766).
5. I have not found this name elsewhere. Perhaps it may be connected with the Southern Utsava-sanketas (Bhīṣma P., ix. 368; and see page 259 note).
6. This is not in the dictionary. It much resembles the Nāsikyās of chap. 55, verse 2, who are, no doubt, the people of Nasik, north-east of Bombay; but they seem to be intended by Nāsikyāvas in verse 51. Naiśadhas can hardly be meant, for they are named in verse 54 and were not in South India. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Nairīkas (xlv. 127) which somewhat resembles the Nairītas of the Bhīṣma P. list (ix. 359).
7. A people of this name have been mentioned in verse 32, as dwelling in Madhya-deśa. The Kuntalas here were in the Dekhan and are the same as those mentioned in Bhīṣma P., ix. 367 and Karna P., xx. 779. It appears Kuntala lay in the region between Belgaum and Bellary (Arch. Surv. of W. India, No. 5 by J.F. Fleet, p.6; and No. 10 by J. Burgess, p. 72 note).

8. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Andhras (xlv. 127), which is, no doubt, right. Andhas are mentioned in the M.Bh. (Udyoga P., xviii. 586; and Bhīṣma P. x. 357), but mistakenly for Andhakas and Andhras respectively. The Andhras or Āndhras were a rude race in early times (Sabhā P., iv. 119; xxx. 1175; xxxiii. 1270; and Vana P., li. 1988); but they established a kingdom during the third and second centuries B.C. Andhra was a kingdom also in Hiuen Tshang's time in the 7th century A.D., and comprised the eastern portion of the Nizam's territories, with its capital at Warangal, according to Cunningham (Anc. Geog. of India). Another capital was Dhenukākaṭa, which is Dharanikōṭa near Amarāvati on the Kistna (Arch. Surv. of W. India, No. 10 by J. Burgess, p.32). Andhra is said to be probably the same as Telinga (ibid., p. 72 note; and dictionary) and is taken to be the Sanskrit name for Telugu in the Madras Census Report. Telugu is the speech of the region extending from a parallel of latitude a little north of Madras northward as far as Ichapur in Ganjam; it does not penetrate into Mysore nor the western limits of Anantapur and Bellary, but is spoken by many of the inhabitants of the Nizam's Dominions and the Central Provinces (Report, p. 188).
9. This is not in the dictionary and I have not met with it elsewhere.
10. "Wood-splitters." The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Nalakālikas (xlv. 127), other forms of which are Nalakānanas and Nabhakānanas (dict.).
11. The Kūrma Purāṇa adds Magadhas (xlvii. 38) mistakenly; they are mentioned in their proper place in verse 44.
12. For Dakṣiṇātyās read Dakṣiṇāyās? The Matsya Purāṇa keeps pace with the text as far as the "Daṇḍakas" and then jumps at once, without any intimation, to the Western peoples beginning with the "Kulyās" who correspond to the "Pulindas" of verse 50.

- 1 This is obviously a mistake for Sūrpārakas, which the Vāyu Purāna reads (xlv 128) Sūrpāraka or Sūrpāraka (both forms seem correct, though the dictionary gives only the latter) was the country in the West where Rāma Jāmadagnya dwelt (Vana P, lxxxv 8185), though it is also placed in the South (Sabhā P, xxx 1169, and Vana P, lxxxviii 8337), because it was near the Southern sea in the Western region (Śānti P, xlix 1778-82) It bordered on the sea near Prabhāsa (Vana P, cxviii 10221-7), which is the modern Somnath in the Peninsula of Kāthiāwār, it included the country around the mouth of the Narmadā (Anuśās P, xxv 1736) and the mouth of that river was so specially connected with Rāma that it was called Jāmadagnya (Matsya Purāna, cxiii 33-34) He built the city Sūrpāraka there (Hari V, xcvi 5300) and Dr Burgess has identified it with the small modern town Supara near Bassin, north of Bombay The country Sūrpāraka therefore comprised the literal tract from about Bassin to about the river Narmadā (Arch Surv of W/India, No 10 p 31) The proper reading in Rāmāy Kiṣk K, xliii 5, should, no doubt, be "the Sūrpārakas also" instead of "the extensive towns" Gorresio's Edition, Annotations)
- 2 This is not in the dictionary The Vāyu Purāna reads Kolavanas (xlv 128), but I have not found either name elsewhere Perhaps this is to be connected with Kalwan, a town about 37 miles north of Nasik (which is mentioned in page 268, note)
- 3 This is not in the dictionary and I have not found the name elsewhere, but the Durgalas are mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 359) Perhaps this is to be connected with Dūngarpur, a town and state about 90 miles northeast of Ahmedabad
- 4 Or Anīkatas, or Cānikatas, neither is in the dictionary The Vāyu Purāna reads Kālitakas (xlv 128), but I have not found these words elsewhere These names suggest Calicut, but that is too far south to be admissible here in the Western region
- 5 See note to verse 47 above This branch would be among the hills southwest of Malwa or the southern portion of the Aravalli hills probably The Vāyu Purāna reads Pulcyas (xlv 129) and the Matsya Kulyas (cxiii 49), but I have not met with either name elsewhere
- 6 This is not in the dictionary The Vāyu Purāna reads Surālas (xlv 129), and the Matsya Sirālas (cxiii 49), but I have not found any of these words elsewhere Are these two names to be identified with Israel? There was an ancient Jewish colony, the modern Beni-Israel, on the Bombay coast before the 2nd century A D (Hunter's Indian Empire, p 234)
- 7 The Vāyu (xlv 129) and the Matsya (cxiii 49) Purānas read Rūpapas I have not met either name elsewhere The Bhīṣma P list mentions Rūpavāhikas (ix 351)
- 8 This as the name of a people is not in the dictionary, but Śva-paca dog-cooking," (=Śva-pāka, which would not suit the metre) occurs, as the name of a degraded tribe (Manu, x 19 and 51) Trisāṅku is said to have associated with the Śva-pākas, when discarded by his father (Hari

- V, xii 721-3) The Vāyu Purāna (xlv 129) and the Matsya (cxiii 49) read Tāpasas, which resembles the Tāpasāsramas placed in the south region by chap 55, verse 27, which might mean the descendants of ascetics
- 9 This is not in the dictionary The Vāyu Purāna reads Turasitas (xlv 129), but I have not met either name elsewhere The Matsya reads Taittirikas (cxiii 49), which resembles the Tittiras mentioned in Bhīṣma P, I 2084 but there are no data to identify them
- 10 This is not in the dictionary The Vāyu Purāna reads Parakṣaras (xlv 129) and the Matsya Kāraskaras (cxiii 49) The Pārasāvas of chap 55, verse 31 appear to be the same people I have not met with any of these names elsewhere, except Kāraskaras in Sabhā P, xlix. 1804, but the Pārasāvas might mean a tribe which claimed descent from Paraśurāma
- 11 This is not in the dictionary The Vāyu Purāna reads "Nāsikyās and others" (xlv 130), this agrees with the Nāsikyās of chap 55, verse 24 except that the latter are placed in the South The Nāsikyās are, no doubt, the people of Nasik, which is an ancient and sacred city north-east of Bombay The Matsya Purāna reads and others who are called Vāsikas" (cxiii 50), but I have not met this name elsewhere
- 12 The Vāyu Purāna (xlv 130) and the Matsya (cxiii 50) say "within the Narmadā"
- 13 Or Bhāru-kacchas as the Matsya Purāna reads (cxiii 50) These are, no doubt, the same as the Bhīru-kacchas of chap 55, verse 21 The word is the Greek Barugaza and survives in the modern Bharuch or Broach, a large town near the mouth of the Narmadā (Anc Geog of India) The Vāyu Purāna reads Bhānu-kacchras (xlv 130) erroneously None of these names occur I believe in the Rāmāyana or Mahābhārata
- 14 These are, no doubt, the people who dwell along the river Mahi (see page 248, note) north of Baroda The Māhikas of the Bhīṣma P (list (ix 354) are no doubt the same
- 15 So also the Matsya Purāna (cxiii 50) "The people who dwell along the R Sarasvatī," which is, no doubt, the small river of that name that flows into the sea at Prabhāsa, the modern Somnath, in the peninsula of Kāthiāwār (Vana P, lxxxii 5002-4, and Śālya P, xxxvi 2048-51) They are not the same as the Sārasvatas of chap 55, verse 7, who were in Madhya-deśa The Vāyu Purāna reads instead "Sahasas and Sāsāvatas" (xlv 130), I have not found either name elsewhere, but the Śāsīkas of the Bhīṣma P list (ix 354) are, no doubt, the same as the second of these
- 16 This name is altogether out of place here and the Kāśmīras have been mentioned in their proper position in verse 41 The Vāyu Purāna reads Kacchvīyas instead (xlv 131) and the Matsya Kacchikas (cxiii 51), which indicate the correct reading They are the people of Kaccha (see chap 55, verse 28) the modern Kachh or Kutch

1. Surāṣṭra is a country frequently mentioned in the M.Bh., but the references seldom convey any definite information. It included the peninsula of Kāthiāwār and the country around the G. of Cambay—that is, not quite all the modern territory called Gujarat (Vana P., lxxxviii. 8344-9). It is very rarely alluded to in the Rāmāyaṇa (see once in Ādi K., xii. 23). The old name survives in the town Surat near the mouth of the Tapti.
2. This form is not given in the dictionary; read Āvantiyās for Avantiyās? They are the people of Avanti; see note to verse 55 where the Avantis are mentioned again, and more appropriately, for chap. 55, verse 22 places them in the Tortoise's right side, i.e., the South : but they were considered to be in both regions. The Vāyu Purāṇa (xlv. 131) and the Matsya (cxiii. 51) read Ānartas, which is perhaps better, as they are placed by chap. 55, verse 30 in the Tortoise's right hind-foot. Ānarta was the country which had for its capital Dvārakā or Dvāravati or Kuśasthali, the modern Dwarka on the sea-shore at the extreme west of the peninsula of Kāthiāwar (Śānti P., ccxli. 12955; Hari V., cxiii. 6265-6). It was Kṛṣṇa's special kingdom, but it was founded long before (Hari V., x. 642-9; and xciv. 5163-9).
3. The people of Arbuda, the modern Mt. Abu near the south end of the Aravalli hills.
4. For Vindhya-nivāsinaḥ read Vindhya-nivāsinaḥ; see verse 55. Vindhya is used here in its general and wider meaning, as denoting the whole mountain chain from Gujarat eastwards and not in the precise sense given it in verses 21-23, because the Naiśadhas, Avantis and other western people are included in this group.
5. I have not met with this name elsewhere, and it is not in the dictionary. The Vāyu Purāṇa (xlv. 132) and the Matsya (cxiii. 52) read Mālavas, which is no doubt correct. Mālava is the modern Mālwa; and the people are generally mentioned in the M.Bh., as a tribe rather than as a settled nation (e.g., Sabhā P., xxxiii. 1270; li. 1871; and Vana P., ccliii. 15256). Mālava does not appear to have been so extensive however as Mālwa and as this passage indicates, denoted rather the upper portion of that region bordering on the Vindhyas; west of Avanti.
6. The name is also written Kāruṣa, Kārūṣa and Kāruṣaka. This people constituted a powerful nation under king Danta-vakra in the Pāndavas' time (Sabhā P., xiii. 575-7; and Hari V., xci. 4963); but they seem to have consisted of several tribes (Udyoga P., iii. 81) and were not looked upon as closely allied to the race around them, for their origin is carried directly back to an eponymous ancestor Karuṣa, a son of Manu Vaivasvata, in the Hari Vārṇas (x. 614; and xi. 658). The position of Karuṣa is indicated by the following allusions. It is linked with Cedi and with Kāśī (Ādi P., cxxiii. 4796; Bhīṣma P., ix. 348; liv. 2242; lvi. 2415; cxvii. 5446; and Karṇa P., xxx. 1231), and with the Vātsyas or Vatsas (Droṇa P., xi. 396; see page 3.7, note); it was not a very accessible country (Sabhā P., li. 1864); and here it is said to rest on the Vindhyas. Moreover Danta-vakra acknowledged Jarāsandha, king of Magadha (see page 265 note) as his suzerain (Sabhā P., xiii. 575-7; and Hari V., xci. 4963). Karuṣa therefore was a hilly country, south of Kāśī and Vatsa, between Cedi and Magadha; that is, it comprised the hilly country of which Rewa is the center, from about the R. Ken on the west as far as the confines of Bihar on the east. I have discussed Karuṣa in a paper on "Ancient Cedi, Matsya and Karuṣa" in the Bengal Asiatic Society's Journal, 1895, Part I. P. 249.

7. This must be incorrect, for the Keralas were a well-known people in the South; see note to Kevalas in verse 45. The Vāyu Purāṇa (xlv. 132) and Matsya (cxiii. 52) read Mekalas, which is no doubt right. They are mentioned in the M.Bh. (Bhīṣma P., ix. 348; and li. 2103) and occupied the Mekala hills and the hilly country around. The Mekala hills are the hills in which the R. Sonc rises (Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣk. K., xl. 20) and which bound Chhattisgarh on the west and north. These people are often coupled, as here, with the Utkalas.
8. See page 262, note. Utkala had a wide extension and falls within this group as well as within the Eastern group.
9. The Uttamarnas are mentioned in the Bhīṣma P. list (ix. 348) and are no doubt the same people. The Matsya Purāṇa reads Auṇḍrāmāṣas (cxiii. 52). A people called Urdhvakaṛṇas are mentioned in chap. 55, verse 16. I have not, however, found any of these names elsewhere.
10. This people formed a well-known kingdom in early times (Ādi P., cxiii. 4449; Vana P., lxix. 2707-8; and Udyoga P., cxc - cxliii) and inhabited the country watered by the river Daśārṇā, the modern Dasan, a tributary of the Jumna. They are named thrice in the Bhīṣma P. list (ix. 348, 350 and 363), which seems inexplicable. They are mentioned both in the Eastern and in the Western regions in the accounts of Bhīṣma's and Nakula's campaigns (Sabhā P., xxviii. 1063-5; and xxxi. 1189); the former of these allusions is correct, but the latter seems to be an error. The capital was Vidiśā, see page 270, note.
11. Or better, Bhojas, as the Vāyu (xlv. 132) and Matsya (cxiii. 52) Purāṇas read. This name, as mentioned in page 266, note, seems to have had more than one application. Bhojas as a Yādava tribe dwelt in Kṛṣṇa's kingdom in Surāṣṭra; and Bhojas inhabited Mṛttikāvati, which seems from the various references to it to have been situated somewhere on the north-eastern limits of the modern Gujarat (Vana P., xiv. 629; xx. 791; cxvi. 10172-6; ccliii. 15245; Mausala P., vii. 244-5; and Hari V., xxxvii. 1980-7; and xxxviii. 2014). These may be the Bhojas

mentioned in the text, inhabiting the extreme western end of the Vindhya range

- 1 Or better, Kiṣkindhakas, as the Matsya Purāna reads (cxiii 52) They are no doubt the same as the Kaiṣkindhyas of chap 55, verse 18, but they cannot have any reference to Kiṣkindhyā in the Rāmāy, for that country lay far to the south of the Godāvartī (see Journal, R A S., 1894, pp 255), and is referred to in M Bh., Sabhā P., xxx 1122 The Kiṣkindhakas mentioned in the Hari Vamśa (xiv 784) may be the people intended here, but there appear to be no data to identify them
- 2 The Matsya Purāna reads Tośālas (cxiii 53) They are not in the dictionary, but Tośhala and Tośala are given doubtfully I have not however found any of these names elsewhere
- 3 These are the people of Dakṣiṇa Kośala or Mahā-Kośala, the modern Chhattisgarh In the Journal, R A S., 1894, p 246, some reasons have been given for placing the Pañcāśaras lake, where Rāma spent ten years of his exile in this region May one hazard the conjecture that it was in consequence of his long residence here, that a colony from North Kośala invaded this region, established a kingdom here and gave their name to this country? The connection was ancient (Āsvamedh-P., lxxxii 2464-5)
- 4 The people of Tripurā, the modern Tewar, on the R Narmadā It was a famous city (Sabhā P., xxx 1164, Vana P., ccliii 15246) deriving its name from a legend that the demons had a triple city Tripura here, made of gold, silver and iron and Śiva destroyed it at the intercession of the gods, this is a favourite subject with the poets (Karna P., xxxiii and xxxiv, and see Aitareya-Brahm., I iv 23 and 24, for the story in an older form), see also Cunningham's Arch Surv Repts., VIII 124, IX 54-55 and XXI 23, but his connection of Tripurā with Cedi in early times is mistaken, see paper on "Ancient Cedi, Matsya and Kārṣa" in Journal, Bengal Asiatic Society, 1895, Part I p 249
- 5 For Vaidīśas read Vaidīśas These are the people of Vidīśā It was a famous town, the capital of the country Daśārṇa and situated on the R Vetravati, the modern Betwa, a little way east of Ujjain (Megha-D., i 24, 25 and 28) It is probably to be identified with the modern Bhilsa, or rather with Bes-nagar the ancient capital which is close to Bhilsa (Cunningham's Stupa of Bharhut, 132) The Vāyu Purāna reads Vaidīkas (xiv 133), which seems erroneous, though the Vaidīśas are really included among the Daśārṇas in the last verse
- 6 These are mentioned as a wild aboriginal tribe who inhabited the slopes of the Vindhya mountains in the Hari-Vamśa (v 310-11) The Matsya Purāna reads Tumuras (cxiii 53) and the Tumbumas (Bhīṣma P., I 2084) may be the same
- 7 The Vāyu Purāna reads Tumuras (xiv 133), see the last note The Matsya reads Tumbaras (cxiii 53) This is no doubt a tribe closely allied to the last

Annajas¹⁰ and the Tustī-kāras,¹¹ the

- 8 This people seems to be the same as the Pañaccaras, who are mentioned several times in the M Bh., see page 254, note The Vāyu Purāna reads Shaṭsuras (xiv 133) and the Matsya Padgamas (cxiii 53), but I have not met either of these names elsewhere
- 9 The people of Niśadha, the Niśadhas, as the Vāyu Purāna reads (xiv 133) This country is chiefly known from the story of its king Nala (Vana P., liii-lxxix), otherwise it is rarely mentioned The chief data for fixing its position are Nala's remarks to his wife when he is banished from his kingdom (id., lxī 2317-9), and as stated in note to page 250, it seems to me the view which he describes could only be obtained completely from a position on the Satpura mountains about longitude 750 E The text says also Niśadha rested on the Vindhya mountains Hence it may be inferred that Niśadha comprised the country south of the Vindhya between longitude 740 and 750, with Avanti to the northeast and Vidarbha to the southeast Its capital was probably in the Tapti valley, Damayanti in wandering from it found her way north-eastward to Cedi (see note to Cedi in chap 55, verse 16)
- 10 I have not met this name elsewhere and it is not in the dictionary The Matsya Purāna reads Arūpas (cxiii 54) which seems erroneous The Vāyu Purāna reads Anūpas (xiv 134) which is no doubt correct Anūpa means "a country situated near water," or "a marshy country" It was applied to various tracts near the sea, generally in the combination sāgarānūpa, e.g., in Bengal (Sabhā P., xxv 1002, xxix 1101, and xxxiii 1268-9, in or near the Pāṇḍya kingdom in the South (Udyoga P., xviii 578), in the north and west of the peninsula of Kathiawar (Hari V., cxiii 6361-9, and cxiv 6410-11), and on the western coast generally (Udyoga P., iii 81), but the name was more specially applied to a tract on the west coast which constituted a kingdom in the Pāṇḍavas' time (Sabhā P., iv 123) The only country which rests on the Vindhya and borders on the sea is the tract on the east of the G of Cambay, north of the Narmadā and this no doubt was Anūpa It is also indicated that Surāstra Anūpa and Ānarta were contiguous countries and that Anūpa lay beyond and south of Surāstra (Hari V., xciv 5142-80) When the kings of Māhiṣmati (see page 265, note) were powerful, the valley of the lower Narmadā and Anūpa would naturally fall under their sway and this no doubt explains why Kārtavīrya is called "lord of Anūpa" (Vana P., cxvi 10189-90 and king Nila also (Bhīṣma P., xciv 4210)
- 11 I have not found this name elsewhere, and it is not in the dictionary The reading should no doubt be Tuṇḍīkeras as the Vāyu Purāna reads (xiv 134) A Tuṇḍīkera king is mentioned in the M Bh. (Droṇa P., xvii 691), and the Tuṇḍīkera (Karna P., v 138), and the Tuṇḍīkeras are said in the Hari-Vamśa to be a branch of the Haihaya race (xxxiv 1895) There is a town called Tendukhera a little north of the Narmadā at nearly longitude 790 E, and as this site suits the text, it may be presumed these people occupied that position in the Narmadā valley The Matsya Purāna reads Śaundīkeras (cxiii 54), not quite correctly

1. The Vāyu Purāṇa (xlv. 134) and the Matsya (cxiii. 54) read Vītihotras which is no doubt correct. Vītihotra was a famous Haihaya king and the Vītihotra were a branch of that race (Hari V., xxxiv. 1895). They are called Vītihotras in the M.Bh. (Droṇa P., lxx. 2436). Being Haihayas, they probably occupied a part of the upper Narmadā valley.
2. They have been mentioned already in verse 52. Avanti had the Narmadā flowing through it (Sabhā P., xxx. 1114; and Vana P., lxxxix. 8354-8) and was on the lower portion of that river, for it is placed in the South is the first of these passages and in the West in the second passage and is verse 52. It appears to have been bounded by the Rkṣa mountains (Satpura range) on the south (Vana P., lxi. 2317), but its limits on the north are not clear. Its capital, though not mentioned in the M.Bh., was Ujjayainī or Viśālā, the modern Ujjain, in later times (Megha D., i. 31). Avanti therefore comprised the region of the sources of the Chambal and the country south-westward as far as the Satpura range. Two brothers Vinda and Anuvinda are often named as the kings of Avanti in the M.Bh. (Udyoga P., clxv. 5753; Droṇa P., xcix. 3682-92; and Kārṇa P., xiii. 498-9), but they were also Kaikeyas and led Kaikeya troops (ibid., 492-524). May it be inferred a branch of the Kaikeyas had invaded and conquered Avanti?
3. Parvatāśrayin. These mountains are it seems only the Himalaya range. This group repeats many of the tribes mentioned in verses 40-42.
4. I have not met this name elsewhere. Are these the modern Newārs, who inhabit the great valley of Nepal and its vicinity and who were the owners of the country prior to the Gurkhā invasion (Journal, Beng. As. Socy., Vol. LXIII, Part I, 213, 214 and 217). The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Nigarharas (xlv. 135); but I have not found it elsewhere. The Matsya reads Nirāhāras (cxiii. 55) which seems erroneous.
5. See page 261 note. The Matsya Purāṇa reads Sarvagas (cxiii. 55) which seems erroneous.
6. These are probably the Uttara or Northern Kurus, for the Kurus of Madhya-deśa could not properly be described as dwelling among mountains. They seem to have been the stock from which the Kurus of Madhya-deśa separated off, for the period when Dhṛta-rāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu were born is described as a golden age, in which both branches of

- the Kurus engaged in happy rivalry (Ādi P., cix. 4337-46); but the wistful recollections of their ancient home idealized it afterwards into a blissful land, where fancy gave itself free scope (Rāmāy., Kiṣk. K., xlv. 82-115). They seem to have occupied the uppermost valleys of the Indus near its sources, with Kaiṭāsa lying beyond (Vana P., cxiv. 11025-35); and fervid imagination also placed them close to Mount Meru on its north side (Bhīṣma P., vi. 207-8; and vii. 254), or in the region Hari-varṣa and declared men could not enter their sacred land (Sabhā P., xxvii. 1054-8). They are described as living in primitive happiness and women had the utmost freedom there (cxvii. 4719-23; and Rāmāy., loc. cit.).
7. This is not in the dictionary and I have not met it elsewhere. Are these people the modern Gurungs, an important tribe of Tatar race, who dwell now throughout Nepal, but whose territory was formerly the country about Lamzung, Ghandrung and Siklis, west of the great valley of Nepal (Journal, Bengal Asiatic Society, Vol. LXIII, Part I, 213, 217 and 223-229; Risley's Castes and Tribes of Bengal, I, 3.4)? The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Tangaṇas here (xlv. 135), after having named them previously (ibid., 120); see verse 41. The Matsya reads A-pathas (cxiii. 55), which seems erroneous.
8. The Khasas or Khasās are generally mentioned as a half-civilized tribe outside India, along with Śakas, Daradas. (Sabhā P., li. 1859; Droṇa P., xi. 399; and cxxi. 4846-7). They are said to have been defeated and degraded by Sagara (Hari V., xiv. 784) and were considered mlecchas (id., xcv. 6440-1; see also Muir's Sansk. Texts, II. 482). The Khasas in the text, however, may perhaps be identified with the Khas, who were formerly a small clan but have developed into the predominant military order of the kingdom of Nepal through inter-marriages with brāhmaṇas (Journal, Bengal Asiatic Society, Vol. LXIII, Part I, 217-223). See chap. 55, verse 6.
9. I have not found this name elsewhere. The Vāyu Purāṇa reads Kuṣa instead of Kunta (xlv. 136), which does not seem satisfactory. The proper reading should no doubt be Kārṇa-prāvaranaṣ, "those who cover themselves with their cars," a people mentioned several times in the M.Bh. (Sabhā P., li. 1875; and Bhīṣma P., li. 2103). They are placed in the South in the story of Sahadeva's conquests (Sabhā P., xxx. 1170) and among the Kirātas in the Eastern region in the Rāmāy. (Kiṣk. K. xl. 29); but it seems permissible to identify them with the Ulūkasi, for a story is told about an Ulūka named Prāvāra-kārṇa (Vana P., cxviii. 13334). The Ulūkas dwelt in the Himalayas (ibid.), and formed a kingdom in the Pāṇḍavas' time (Udyoga P., clx and clx), but it seems impossible to fix their position more definitely than somewhere in Nepal (Sabhā P., xxvi. 1014-20). The word Kārṇa-prāvaranaṣ is also used as an adjective, for Hanūmān saw female Rākṣasas in Laṅkā "three-eared and pin-eared, long-eared, careless and one-eyed and one-eared, and having their cars as a covering" (Rāmāy., Sund. K., xvii. 24); and it was an ancient belief that there were people with immense cars which covered their bodies (Plin., iv. 13; and vii. 2; Mandeville's Travels, chap. xix). The Matsya Purāṇa mentions Kutha-prāvaraṇas and Karṇa-prāvaraṇas (cxx. 56 and 58).

1. This people have been already mentioned in verse 42.
2. These appear to be the same as the Dārvas mentioned in verse 42; see Cunningham's Arch. Surv. Repts., II. 15; and XIV. 145.
3. This is not in the dictionary; but it seems to be the same as Sakṛd-grāhas or Sakṛd-grāhas, who are said to be a terrible mleccha tribe in the North (Bhīṣma P., ix. 373). There appear to be no data to fix their position unless they may be connected with the Sakṛm-nandā, which seems to be a river in the east of Nepal (Vana P., lxxxiv. 8137). The text might also be read "and the Kṛtrakas," but I have found no such name elsewhere.
4. Or Traigartas. Trigarta was considered to be in the Northern region (Sabhā P., xxvi. 1026) and also in the Western (id., xxxi. 1189). It is generally mentioned in connection with the Sindhus, Madras and other Punjab nations (id., li. 1870; Vana P., cclxiv. 15593-9; cclxx. 15743; Bhīṣma P., xviii. 688; cxviii. 5485; cxx. 5649; Droṇa P., vii. 183; and also Hari V., xci. 4965-70). It was near the Kurus, for the Pāṇḍavas when burnt out of Vāraṇāvata visited the Trigartas and other contiguous nations (Ādi P., clvi. 6084-7); and also near Matsya and Śālva, for these two kingdoms had often raided into Trigarta (Virāṭa P., xxx). From these indications it appears that Trigarta must have touched the Punjab on the west and the Kurus on the southeast and been close to Matsya (see page 253 note) and Śālva (see note to chap. 55, verse 6) on the south; hence it must have comprised the country from Amballa and Pattiala to the R. Bias, i.e., the Jalandhar doab and the country southeast of that. Cunningham includes Kangra also (Arch. Surv. Repts., II. 16; and XIV. 116 and 117; and Buddh. Cave Temples, p. 93). At the time of the great war Prasthala belonged to Trigarta (see note on page 260) and so brought the Trigarta territories close to Matsya and Śālva.
5. These people, no doubt, claimed to be the descendants of the ṛṣi Gālava (Hari V., xxvii. 1463-7; and xxxii. 1767-76), who was a famous son of Viśvāmītra (Anuśās. P., iv. 249-259; Udyoga P., cv-cxviii; and see cantos xx and xxi above) or took their name from him; see similarly the Ātreyas and Bharadvājas of verse 39.
6. See note to verse 40.
7. These have been already mentioned in verse 41.

9. This implies that the Himavat range included also the Sulaiman Mountains along the west of the Punjab. The simile must refer to a drawn bow, with the string angular in the middle.
10. Marutas tathā seems incorrect. Read instead martyatā tathā?
11. Mrga-paśv-apsaro-yonis. The meaning of "aquatic animal" is given to ap-sara but not to ap-saras in the dictionary.
12. For pra-yātīrcad pra-jātīh?
13. For sadā eṣa read sadaivaisha?
14. This seems rather meaningless. For sva-karma-khyāpanotsukaiḥ the MS. reads sva-karma-kṣapanonmukhaiḥ, "who are averse to diminishing the stock of their actions;" but kṣapanotsukaiḥ seems preferable, "who are eager to diminish the stock of their actions."

Mārkaṇḍeya continuing represents India as resting upon Viṣṇu in the form of a tortoise looking eastward and distributes the various countries and peoples accordingly over the several parts of his body, together with the corresponding lunar constellations. He gives an astrological application to this arrangement and enjoins the performance of religious rites to avoid calamity. He also distributes the constellations of the Zodiac over the Tortoise's body.

2. The arrangement of the countries is very far from correct; and this canto cannot be compared with the last canto for accuracy. To make the shape of India conform to that of a Tortoise lying outspread and facing eastwards is an absurd fancy and a difficult problem.
3. This is not in the dictionary and I have not found the name elsewhere. Does it mean "those who observe the Vedas and the Mantras especially" or has it any reference to Brahmāvarta?
4. I have not found this elsewhere and it is not in the dictionary. Māṇḍavyas are mentioned in verse 38.
5. Or Śalveyas as they were also called (Vana P., cclxiii. 15576-82). The Śalvas are often mentioned in the M.Bh. They were near the Kurus (Virāta P. i. 11-12) and the Trigartas (id., xxx); and in the beautiful story of Satyavat and Sāvitrī, he was a Śalva prince and she a Madra princess (Vana P., ccxcii). Other indications of Śalva are given in the allusions to Kṛṣṇa's conquest of it, but the story is marred because the people are called Daityas and Dānavas and Saubha which seems to have been the capital is described as a city and as situated in the air and also as able to move about freely (Vana P., xiv-xxii; Udyoga P. xlvii. 1886; and Droṇa P. xi. 395. The Śalva king attacked Dvāravātī, and Kṛṣṇa in retaliation killed him and destroyed Saubha at the gulf of the sea (ibid.), which can be none other than the Rann of Kachh. From these indications it appears Śalva was the country along the western side of the Aravalli hills. Saubha is incapable of being determined. Śalva seems to have contained another city called Mārtikāvata (or Mrttikāvati?), which is probably the same as the Mrtikāvati mentioned in page 269, note (Vana P, xiv 629, and xx 791) The Hari Vamśa says king Sagara degraded the Śālvas (xiv 784), but this is a late tale for the Śālva king was one of the leading monarchs in Kṛṣṇa's time (id, cviii 6029) and was brother of Śiśupāla king of Cedi (Vana P, xiv 620-7), and other allusions shew that Śālva was a famous kingdom before that (Udyoga P, clxxiii and clxxiv, and Anuśā P cxxxviii 6267), besides which, Satyavat and Sāvitrī rank with the noble characters in ancient Indian story The weird legend of Vyusitāśva's queen no doubt means her sons became Śālvas and did not originate the race (Ādi P, cxxi 4695-4714) as in the case of the Madras (page 257, note)

- 1 The Nīpas began with king Nīpa of the Paurava race, who established his dynasty in Kāmpilya, the capital of Southern Pāñcāla, about 12 or 15 generations anterior to the Pāñdavas, the dynasty flourished in king Brahmādatta who was contemporary with their fifty ancestor Pratiṅga and it was destroyed in Bhīṣma's time (Hari V, xx 1060-73, M-Bh, Ādi P, cxxxviii 5512-3, and Matsya P xlix 52 and 53) in the person of Janamejaya, nicknamed Durbuddhi, who after exterminating his kinsmen was himself killed by Ugrāyudha (Udyoga P, lxxiii 2729 Hari-V, xx 1071-2, and Matsya P, xlix 59) Kāmpilya is the modern Kampil on the old Ganges between Budaon and Farukhabad (Cunningham, Arch Surv Repts, I 255) Prīta, who is said to have been the last king's grandson but was a Pāñcāla with a different ancestry, obtained the kingdom and handed down a new dynasty to his son Draupada (Hari V, xx 1082-1115, and xxxii 1778-93) The Nīpas who survived are mentioned in the M Bh as an inferior people (Sabhā P, xlix 1804, and I 1844)
- 2 The Śakas were originally an outside race and are mentioned often in the M Bh They were considered to be mlecchas (Vana P, clxxxviii 12838-9), and were classed generally with Yavanas, but also with Kāmbojas, Pahlavas, Tukhāras and Khaśas (Sabhā P, xxxi 1199, I 1850, Udyoga P iii 78, xviii 590, Drona P xi 399, xx 798, cxxi 4818, Śānti P lxxv 2429, and Vana P, li 1990, and also Rāmāy, Kiśk K xlv 13) Their home therefore lay to the north-west and they are generally identified with the Scythians (Lat Sacae) They penetrated into India by invasions and a branch is mentioned in the M-Bh as in the Eastern region, apparently in Bihar (Sabhā P, xxix 1088, and li 1872, see also Rāmāy, Kiśk K xl 21) Buddha Śākya-muni is considered to have been of Śaka race Their inroads continued through many centuries and were resisted by various kings, and they are mentioned in the text as having established themselves in Madhya-deśa The Hari-Vamśa makes them the descendants of Narisya one of Manu Vaivasvata's sons (x 614 and 641), another account says they were Kṣatriyas and became degraded from having no brāhmanas (M Bh, Anuśā P xxxiii 2103, and Manu x 43-44) The Rāmāy has an absurd tale about their creation (Ādi-K lvi 3, see page 256 note)

- 3 Ujjhāna is given in the dictionary as the name of a region but have not met it anywhere Perhaps it is to be identified with the town Ujjhānā, which was situated south-east of Vārana-sihala, which is the same as Hāstīnapura, or near it (Rāmāy, Ayodh K lxxiii 8-10), and in that direction there is now a town called Ujhanī about 11 miles south-west of Budaon
- 4 Vatsa, but it would be better to read Vatsā, the Vatsas," see page 3 7, note
- 5 This is not in the dictionary and I have not found the name elsewhere It may mean "those who are reckoned among Ghoshas or herdsmen," and be an adjective to Khaśas
- 6 Or Khaśas They were an outside people on the north, as mentioned in page 272 note In one passage they are placed between Meru and Mandara near the R Śailodā (Sabhā P, li 1858-9), that is somewhere in Western Tibet, according to the Matsya Purāna the R Śailodakā rises at Mt Aruṇa which is west of Kaiāsa and flows into the Western Sea (cxx 19-23) Khaśa has been connected with Kashgar The Khaśas also made inroads into India, for they are classed among the Punjab nations in a passage in the M Bh, which shews its later age by its tone (Kama P, xlv 2070), and they are mentioned in the text here as settled in Madhya-deśa Mānu says they were Kṣatriyas and became degraded by the loss of sacred rites and the absence of brāhmanas (x 43-44)
- 7 "Those who live along the Sarasvatī," that is, the sacred river north of Kurukṣetra They are not the same as the people named in chap 54, verse 51
- 8 See page 253 note
- 9 Śūrasena lay immediately south of Indraprastha or Delhi (Sabhā P, xxx 1105-6) and comprised the country around Mathurā, the modern Muttra (Hari V, lv 3093-3102, and xc 4973) to the east of Matsya (Virāta P, v 144-5), and it extended apparently from the Chambal to about 50 miles north of Muttra (see Cunningham, Arch Surv Repts, XX 2) The Śūrasenas belonged to the Yādava and Haihaya race, for Mathurā the capital is specially called the capital of the Yādavas and the kings who reigned there belonged to that race (Hari V, lvii 3180-83, lxxix 4124-34, xc 4904, cxiv 6387 and xxxviii 2024 and 2027) a king named Śūrasena, a son of Arjuna Kārtavīrya, is mentioned (id, xxxiv 1892), who is, no doubt, intended as the eponymous ancestor of this people, for Arjuna who vanquished Rāvana was slightly anterior to Rāma, and the Hari Vamśa says Śūrasena occupied this country after Śatrughna's time (id, lv 3102), see next note The Śūrasenas constituted a powerful kingdom shortly before the Pāñdavas' time and Kṛṣṇa killed Kamsa, who was one of the chief monarchs of that age, broke up the sovereignty and betook himself to Anarta In later times Śūrasena presumably regained importance, for it gave its name to Śūraseni one of the chief Prākṛts
- 10 Mathurā was the capital of Śūrasena as mentioned in the last note and is the modern Muttra on the R Jumna (Hari V, lv 3060-61) The Hari Vamśa says that Madhu, king of the Daityas and Dānavas and his son Lavana reigned at

Madhupura and Madhuvāra (lv 3061-3), and during Rāma's reign Śatrughna killed Lavana, cut down Madhuvāra and built Mathurā on its site (lv 3083-96, and xciv 5243-7), and after the death of Rāma and his brothers Bhīma of the Yādava race according to one passage (id., xciv 5243-7) took the city and established it in his own family, and Śūrasena (see the last note) according to another passage occupied the country around (id., lv 3102) It is said Bhīma's son Andhaka was reigning in Mathurā while Kusa and Lava reigned in Ayodhyā (id., xciv 5247-8) These passages seem to make a marked distinction between the population in the country and the dynasty in the city

- 1 Dharmāranaya was the name of a wood near Gayā (Vana P., lxxxiv 8063-4, Anuśās P. xxv 1744, and clxv 7655, with Vana P. lxxxvii 8304-8)
- 2 This is not in the dictionary and I have not found the name elsewhere, but Buchanan Hamilton says there was a class of brāhmanas in Bihar, called Jausi, the vulgar pronunciation of Jyotis (Vol I p 156)
- 3 These are stated in the dictionary as in the text to be a people in Madhya-deśa, but I have not met the name elsewhere the word may however be an adjective, "yellow-necked," and qualify Gudās and Aśmakas which are joined together in a compound
- 4 These are stated in the dictionary as in the text to be a people in Madhya-deśa, but I have not found the name elsewhere Probably it is to be connected with the country Gauḍa which Cunningham says was formerly the southern part of North Kosala, i.e. the southern portion of the tract between the Ghogra and Rapti rivers (Arch Surv Repts I 327) The town Gaur in the Maldah district in Bihar, which was once the capital of the Bengal kingdom, is too far east to be admissible here
- 6 The people of Vidcha, see page 264, note
- 7 Pañcāla or Pāñcāla was a large country, comprising the territory on both banks of the Ganges and bounded on the north by Sub-Himalayan tribes, on the east by the same tribes and Kosala, on the south by Śūrasena, the junction of the Jumna and Chambal and Kānyakubja (Ādi P., cxxxviii 5512-3 and Virāṭa P., v 144) and on the west by the Kurus and Śūrasenas (Sabhā P., xxviii 1061, and Bhīma P., ix 346) The Pāñcālas originated in the descendants of Ajamiḍha by his wife Nili, though the M Bh (Ādi P., xciv 3722-3) and Hari Vamsa (xxxii 1776-80, with which agrees the Matsya Purāna, xliv, 43-4 and I 1-4) differ in the number and names of the descendants These passages from the Hari Vamsa and Matsya Purāna date their rise about eight or nine generation prior to the Pāṇḍavas and the passage from the M Bh, seems to point to a much earlier kingdom The country being large was divided into two kingdoms, the Ganges being the dividing line (Ādi P., cxxxviii 5509-16), to the north was North Pañcāla or Ahicchatra, with its capital of Ahicchatrā, the modern Ahicchatra, 18 miles west of Bareilly and 7 north of Aonla (Cunningham, Arch Surv Repts, I 255-7), and to the south was South Pañcāla, with its capital at Kāmpilya, the modern Kampil, on the old Ganges between Budaon and Farukhabad (ibid., 255) The Śrījāyas, or descendants of Śrījāya, who are often mentioned in the M Bh (e.g., Ādi P., cxxxviii 5476, and Drona P., xxi 883, 895 and 915) appear to have reigned in North Pañcāla and the Nīpas in South Pañcāla (see page 274 note), on the destruction of the better, Pṛṣata of the former dynasty united the two kingdoms, but Drona conquered his son Drupada and re-established the two kingdoms, keeping North Pañcāla himself and restoring the South to Drupada who then reigned in Kāmpilya and Mākandī (Ādi P., cxxxviii, Hari V., xx 1060-1115)

- 8 Putting aside the Utsava-sanketas (see page 259 note), the only instance where I have met this name is in the M Bh (Śānti P., clxxiv 6514) where it is introduced apparently as the name of a town, but there is nothing to indicate where it was, and it is not so given in the dictionary Probably however the reading here and there should be Sāketa, that is, Ayodhyā and its people Otherwise they are not mentioned in this group where they should be and they can hardly be intended by the Kosalas in verse 14
- 9 These are mentioned in the M Bh only as an outside race, along with the Tukhāras, Śakas, Pahlavas (Sabhā P., I 1850, and Śānti P., lxxv 2429) Their being mentioned here in the middle of India suggests that they must have invaded and settled there It may be noticed also that Yudhishthira took the name Kanka during his disguised residence at Virāṭa's Court (Virāṭa P., vii 224)
- 10 I have met no people of this name elsewhere Perhaps the reading should be Mālavas, the people of Malwa (see page 268 note), they are mentioned in verse 45 below, but their more appropriate position is here
- 11 I have not met this name elsewhere, but it may mean the people of Kāla-koti, which is mentioned in the M Bh as a place of pilgrimage (Vana P., xciv 8513), and which appears from the context to be between the Ganges and the Bāhūdā (the Ram-ganga or perhaps the Gurra east of it, see page 246 note) Koṭi-tīrtha mentioned in the Matsya Purāna (cv 44) seems to be the same Moreover Kālakotī may be the same as Kāla-kūta, which is alluded to occasionally (Sabhā P., xxv 997) Udyoga P., xviii 596-601 and perhaps Ādi P., cxix 4637), and for which the second passage indicates a similar position
- 12 Heretics," applied to Jains and Buddhists I have met with no people of this name
- 13 See page 245 note
- 14 I have not met this name elsewhere A river called Kāpiṅjalā is mentioned in the Bhīma P list (ix 334), but without any data to identify it Two other readings may be suggested Kālingakas, i.e., Kalingas (see page 258, note), or better perhaps Kālañjaras, the inhabitants of Kalinjār, an ancient and celebrated hill and fort 33 miles south of Banda in Bundelkhand, it is mentioned only as a tīrtha in the M Bh (Vana P., lxxxv 8198-8200, lxxxvii 8317, and Anuśās P. xxv 1721-2)

Kuruvāhyas¹ and the Udumbara people² and the Gajāhvayas³—these are in the middle⁴ of the Tortoise as he lies within the water

1 This reading appears to be wrong, but it is not easy to suggest another entirely satisfactory. It is clear, however, that the Kurus are one of the races meant. Vāhyas are said to be a people in the dictionary.

The Kurus occupied the country from the Śivis and Sub-Himalayan tribes on the north to Matsya, Śūrasena and South Pañcala on the south and between North Pañcala on the east and Marubhūmi (the Rajputana desert) on the west. Their territory appears to have been divided into three parts, Kurukṣetra, the Kurus and Kuru-jāngala (Ādi P., cix 4337-40) Kurukṣetra, 'the cultivated land of the Kurus,' comprised the whole tract on the west of the Jumna and included the sacred region between the Sarasvatī and Drśadvatī (Vana P., lxxxiii 5071-8 and 7073-6, Rāmāy., Ayodh-K., lxx 12, and Megha D., i 49-50), it is said to have obtained this name because it was raised to honour, pra-kṛta, by Kuru (Śāilya, P., liv 3009), the Hari-V., in xxxii 1800, inverts the course of history and this explanation was afterwards confused and altered into that of his ploughing it (e.g., Matsya P., i 20-22) Kuru-jāngala, 'the waste land of the Kurus,' was the eastern part of their territory and appears to have comprised the tract between the Ganges and North Pañcala (Rāmāy., Ayodh-K., lxxx 11, and M Bh., Sabhā P., xix 793-4). The middle region between the Ganges and Jumna seems to have been called simply the Kurus' country. The capital was Hāstinapura (see note below) and Khāṇḍāvapraṣṭha or Indrapraṣṭha, the modern Delhi, was a second capital founded by the Pāṇḍavas (Ādi P., cvii 7568-94). Kuru was the eleventh ancestor of the Pāṇḍavas (id., xciv 3738-51, and xcvi 3791-3820, and Hari V., xxxii 1799-1800).

2 Udumbara is Kachh or Kutch according to Lassen (Ind. Alt., Map) and Cunningham (Arch. Surv. Repts., XIV 115 and 135) and their identification may apply to the Audumbaras mentioned in Sabhā P., li 1869, but the Udumbaras here are placed in Madhya-deśa. I have not met with the name elsewhere and it is not in the dictionary. Certain descendants of Viśvāmītra were called Audumbaras (Hari V., xxvii 1466), and there was a river Udumbarāvatī in the South (id., clxviii 9511).

3 The people of Hāstinapura or Hastināpura, the capital of the Kurus (see above note), which is situated on the old bed of the Ganges, 22 miles north-east of Meerut, latitude 29° 9' N., longitude 78° 3' E. It is said to have been founded by king Hastin who was the fourth ancestor of Kuru (Ādi P., xcvi 3787-92, and Hari V., xx 1053-4), but he is omitted from the genealogy in Ādi P., xciv 3714-39 and Hari V., xxxii 1754-6 and i 1795-9. By a play on the meaning of the word hastin, 'elephant', the city was also called Hastinapura (Āsrama-vās-P., xvii 508 and xxxvi 1010), Gajāpura (dict.), Gajāhvayā (Udyoga P., clxxvi 6071), Gajā-sāhvaya (Ādi P., cxiii 4441 and 4460), Nāgapura (ibid., 4461-2), Nāgāhva (dict.), Nāga-sāhvaya (Ādi P., cxxxi 5146) Vāranāhvaya (Āsrama-vās P., xxxix 1098) and Vāranā-sāhvaya (dict.). It seems probably, however, that the derivation from 'elephant' is the real one, because of the numerous freely-coined synonyms with that meaning and because there was another town Vāranāvata among the Kurus not far from Hāstinapura (Ādi P., cxlii, with the description of the Pāṇḍavas' subsequent movements, cxlix-cl and clvi 6084-7), and also a place called Vāranā-sthala among the Kurus or North Pañcalas (Rāmāy., Ayodh. K., lxxiii 8) which was perhaps the same as Hāstinapura (see page 274, note)

4 Madhye in verse 7

5 This does not appear to be the name of any nakṣatra, but seems to mean Mrga-sīras or Āgrahāyanī, which follows Rohinī and precedes Ārdīā (verse 15 and note)

6 Vipātaka, not in the dictionary

7 Girayo in verse 12, see note below

8 I have not met with this name anywhere else and it is not in the dictionary as the name of a hill. It is to be identified with Baidyanath, near Deogarh in the Santhal Parganas, where there is said to be one of the twelve eldest liṅgas of Śiva (Imp. Gaz. Of India, Art. Deogarh)?

9 This may be the mountain from which Sugrīva summoned his vassal monkeys (Rāmāy., Kiṣk. K., xxxvii 5) and also the mountain called Añjanātha, mentioned in the M Bh. (Anuśās. P., clxv 7658), but there are no data to identify it

10 Jambu-mat is given in the dictionary as the name of a mountain, but I have not met with either name elsewhere

11 This is mentioned in the dictionary, but I have not found it anywhere else

12 Or, no doubt, Sūrpā-karṇa, but I have not met with either as the name of mountain, nor is it given in the dictionary

13 I have not met with this as the name of a mountain elsewhere, nor is it in the dictionary. On hill Udayagiri near Bhubaneswar, about 20 miles south of Cuttack, are a number of rock-cut caves and one is sculptured in the form of a tiger's open mouth and is known by the name

Kharmaka¹ and Karvatāśana;² these hills,³ the people of Mithilā,⁴ the Subhras⁵ and the Vadanadanturas⁶ and the Candreśvaras⁷ also and the Khaśas⁸ and the Magadhas,⁹ the Prāgyotisas¹⁰ and the Lauhityas,¹¹ the cannibals who dwell on the sea-coast;¹² the hills Pūrnoktata,¹³

Vyāghra-mukha, can this be the hill intended here? It would be somewhat out of place here, but the grouping in this canto is far from perfect

- 1 I have not found this name elsewhere, nor is it in the dictionary Is it to be connected with the Kharak-pur hills in the south of the Monghyr District in Bihar? A people called Karbukas are mentioned in the East in the Rāmāy (Kīsk K xl 29)
- 2 This is not in the dictionary and I have not met with it elsewhere, but it is no doubt to be connected with the country or town Karvatā, which is mentioned in conjunction with Tāmra-lipta and Suhma in the west of Bengal M Bh , Sabhā P , xxix 1098-9) See Karbukas in the last note
- 3 The two lines of verse 12 must, it seems, be inverted, so as to bring the word girayo next to the mountains named in verse 11 otherwise the word is meaningless
- 4 For Mithilā, see page 264 note, but the people of Vidha have been mentioned already in verse 8 as situated in Madhya-deśa
- 5 I have not met this name elsewhere, nor is it in the dictionary as the name of a people Probably the reading should be Suhmas, see p 327 note The Sumbhas (Rāmāy , Kīsk K , xl 25) are no doubt the same
- 6 This is in the dictionary as the name of a people, but I have not met with it elsewhere It may mean "showing their long teeth when speaking," but here it is no doubt the name of a people as stated in the dictionary
- 7 I have not found this elsewhere nor is it in the dictionary as the name of a people A people called Candravatsas are mentioned in the M Bh (Udyoga P , lxxiii 2732)
- 8 See page 271 note and page 273 note Here a branch of these people is placed in the East of India
- 9 See page 264 note

- 11 The people of Lauhitya (M Bh , Sabhā P , xxix 1100, and li 1864) which was the country on the banks of the R Lohita or Lauhitya (Sabhā P , ix 374, Rāmāy , Kīsk K , xl 26, and Raghu V , iv 81 or Lohityā (Bhīṣma P , ix 343) and probably also Lohita-gangā (Hari V , cxxii 6873-6), the modern Brahmaputra The mention of Lohita in Sabhā P , xxvi 1025 and Lauhitya in Anuśās P , xxv 1732 appears to have a different application, and a place Lohitya is mentioned in Rāmāy , Ayodh K , lxxiii 13, as situated between the Ganges and Gomati Viśvāmitra had certain descendants called Lohitas (Hari V , xxvii 1465) or Lauhitas (id , xxxii 1771) who may have been the children of his grandson Lauhi (id , xxvii 1474)
- 12 Sāmudrāḥ puruśādakāḥ, that is, on the coast of the Bay of Bengal which was the Eastern Ocean They are mentioned in the Rāmāy (Kīsk K , xl 30)
- 13 This is mentioned in the dictionary, but I have not found it elsewhere

रौद्रं पुनर्वसुः पुष्यो नक्षत्रत्रितयं मुखे।

- 14 This is in the dictionary, but I have not found it elsewhere
- 15 There are several hills of this name, that intended here is no doubt the hill near Rājagṛha or Rajgir Its ancient name Cunningham says was Rṣigiri (Arch Surv Repts , I 21 and plate iii), which is mentioned in the M Bh (Sabhā P , xx 798-800)
- 16 This is not in the dictionary and I have not found it elsewhere The proper reading is probably Kāśāyo, "the Kāśīs," the people of Benares (see page 254 note) They are a little out of place here and should fall within the former group (verses 6-9), but are not mentioned there and therefore come in here probably, for the grouping in this canto is far from perfect
- 17 This is not in the dictionary and I have not found it elsewhere The first part of the word is no doubt a mistake for Mckala or Mckalā, for the Mckalas and Mckala hills are not mentioned in any other group in this canto and may be intended here, though considerably out of their proper position (see page 268 note) There was also a town or river called Mckalā, which (if a river) was distinct from the Narmadā, but it appears to have been more on the western side (Hari V , xxxvii 1983) and therefore less admissible in this passage I would suggest that the second part of the word should be Puṇḍrās, "the Puṇḍras" (see page 264 note) The text Mekhalā-mustaśas however might mean "those who have been robbed of the triple zone" worn by the first three classes (see Manu , ii 42) and might then be an adjective qualifying Kaśāyas
- 18 Or Tāmra-liptakas, see page 264 note
- 19 "People who have only one tree," but perhaps the reading should be Eka-pādakās, "people who have only one foot" It was a common belief that such people existed, see M Bh , Sabhā P , I 1838 (where they are placed in the South) and Pliny , vii 2, and it lasted down to modern times, see Mandeville's Travels, chap XIV See Eka-pādās in verse 51
- 20 The people of Vardhamāna, the modern Bardhwan (commonly Burdwan) in West Bengal It is not mentioned in the Rāmāy , nor M Bh , but is a comparatively old town
- 21 This can hardly refer to Kosala or Oudh (see page 254 note) for, if so, this people would have been placed along with the people of Mithilā and Magadha in verse 12 whereas here the Kośālas are separated off from those nations by the insertion of three hills in verse 13 and are grouped with the Mekhalāmustaśas, Tāmra-liptas and Vardhamānas Kosala here must therefore mean Dakṣiṇa Kosala which is mentioned in chap 54, verse 54, as lying on the slope of the Vindhya mountains (see page 269 note) and especially the north and east portions of it, for the southern part is placed appropriately in the right fore foot in verse 16

1 This appears incorrect. Read Raudri (fem), a name for the constellation Ārdra

2 For Kroštuke read Krauštuke

3 See page 266 note

4 See page 261 note

5 They are mentioned in the Bhīṣma P list (ix 350) but with no data to identify their territory. Here they are joined in one compound with Kalingas and Bangas

6 The people of Dakṣiṇa or Southern Kosala, see page 270 note, the south portion is especially meant, see verse 14

7 See page 264 note

8 There is no mention of a people called Cedis in the Eastern region in the older poems, but Cunningham repeatedly places a Cedi race in Chhattisgarh (Arch Surv Repts, IX 54-57, and XVII 2-), yet in ancient times it was not so. Cedi was then one of the countries near the Kurus (M Bh, Virāṭa P, i 11-12, Udyoga P, lxxi 2594-5). It is placed in the Eastern region in the account of Bhīṣma's conquests there (Sabhā P, xxviii 1069-74) and also in the South region in the description of Arjuna's following the sacrificial horse (Āśvamedh P, lxxxiii 2466-9), and it is also mentioned along with the Daśārnas (see page 269 note) and Pulindas (see page 266 note) in the former passage. Cedi bordered on the Jumna, for king Vasu when hunting in a forest sent a message home to his queen across that river and the forest could not have been far from his territory (Ādi P, lxiii 2373-87). Cedi moreover, is often linked with Matsya and Karūṣa (e.g., Bhīṣma P ix 348, lix 2242, and Kama P, xxx 1231, see page 254 note and page 268 note) and with Kāśi and Karūṣa (e.g., Ādi P, cxxiii 4796, and Bhīṣma P, cxvii 5446). It was closely associated with Matsya and must have touched it, for an ancient king Sahaja reigned over both (Udyoga P, lxxiii 2732) and it seems probable that king Vasu's son Matsya became king of Matsya (Ādi P, lxiii 2371-93, and Hari V, xxxii 1804-6). From these indications it appears Cedi comprised the country south of the Matsyas¹⁰ and others who dwell on the Vindhya mountains,¹¹ the Vidarbhas¹² and the Nārkelas,¹³ the Dharma-dvīpas¹⁴ and the Elikas,¹⁵ the Vyāghra-grīvas,¹⁶ the Mahā-grīvas,¹⁷ the bearded Traipuras,¹⁸ the Kāiskindhyas¹⁹ and the Haima-kūtas,²⁰ the the Jumna, from the R Chambal on the north-west to near Citrakūṭa on the south-east, and on the south it was bounded by the plateau of Malwa and the hills of Bundelkhand

Its capital was Śuktimatī or Śukti-sāhvayā, (Vana P, xxii 898, and Āśvamedh P, lxxxiii 2466-7) and was situated on the R Śuktimatī, which is said to break through the Kolāhala hills (Ādi P, lxiii 2367-70, see page 245 note). This river rises in the Vindhya Range and must be east of the R Daśārnā, which is the most westerly river that rises in that range (compare notes and on page 245), it is probably the modern R Ken, for which I have found no Sanskrit name. Hence the Kolāhala hills were probably those between Panna and Bijawar in Bundelkhand and the capital Śuktimatī was probably near the modern town Banda. The kingdom of Cedi seems to have been founded as an offshoot by the Yādavas of Vidarbha (Matsya Purāṇa, xliii 4-7, and xliiv 14 and 28-38), and after it had lasted through some 20 or 25 reigns, Vasu Uparicara, who was a Kaurava of the Paurava race, invaded it from the north some nine generations anterior to the Paṇḍavas and conquering it established his own dynasty in it (id., I 20-50), which lasted till after their time. - 5 The Niśādas were an aboriginal race and are described as very black, dwarfish and short-limbed, with large mouth, jaws and ears, with pendent nose, red eyes and copper coloured hair and with a protuberant belly Their name is fancifully derived from the command niśīda, "sit down," given to the first of them who was created (Hari V, v 306-10, and Muir's Sansk Texts, II 428) They were specially a forest people and were scattered all over Northern and Central India The earliest references shew, they occupied the forest tracts throughout North India In Rāma's time they held the country all around Prayāga and apparently southwards also (Journal, R A S, 1895, page 237), but in the Pāṇḍavas' time they occupied the high lands of Māhwa and Central India (M Bh, Sabhā P, xxxix 1085, xxx 1109 and 1170, and Āśvamedh P, lxxxiii 2472-5) and still formed a kingdom (Udyoga P, iii 84, and xlvii 1884) It would seem that, as the Aryans extended their conquests, the Niśādas were partly driven back into the hills and forests of Central India and were partly subjugated and absorbed among the lowest classes of the population as appears from casual allusions (Rāmāy, Ādi P, ii 12, and M Bh, Ādi P, cxlviii, and Vana P, cxxx 10538-9) They are also mentioned as being pearl-divers and seamen in an island which seems to be on the west coast (Hari V, xcv 5214 and 5233-9) They were looked upon as very degraded in later times, but at first their position was not despicable, for Rāma and Guha king of the Niśādas met as friends on equal terms (Ayodh K, xlvi 20, xlvii 9-12, and xcii 3), and it seems Kṛṣṇa's aunt Śrūtadevā married the king of the Niśādas (Hari V, xxxv 1930 and 1937-8)
- 6 I have not found this name elsewhere, nor is it in the dictionary Perhaps it is to be connected with Śrī-kākula, the modern Sreewacolum, a town 19 miles west of Masulipatam It was founded by king Sumati of the Śātavāhanas or Andhras and was their first capital (Arch Surv of S India by R Sewell, I 55, and Report on Amarāvati, pp 3 and 4)
- 7 These were a tribe of Śāvaras (see page 266 note) who lived upon leaves, hence their name according to the dictionary, but a forest tribe would hardly live solely on leaves. Might it not more properly mean "the Śāvaras who wear leaves"? A girdle of leaves was the ordinary clothing of most of the aboriginal tribes, see Dalton's Ethnology, passim They appear to be the modern Pāns, a very low

1 Karkotaka was the name of the Nāga king whom Nala saved from a forest fire (M Bh , Vana P , lxvi), where that happened is not clear, but probably it was somewhere in the middle or eastern part of the Satpura range (see page 270 note), can that region be intended here? Karkotaka is also stated in the dictionary to be the name of a barbarous tribe of low origin, but I have not met with them elsewhere. Perhaps this word, however, may be connected with the modern Karāḍ, a town in the Satara District, near which are many Buddhist caves. Its ancient name was Karahākaḍa or Karahākaṭa according to inscriptions (Arch Surv , of W India by J Burgess, Memo No 10, page 16 and Cunningham's Stupa of Bharhut pp 131, 135 and 136) and it seems to be the same as Karahātaka mentioned in the M Bh , (Sabhā P , xxx 1173 and spoken of there as heretical, pāṣaṇḍa, no doubt because it was a Buddhist sanctuary as evidenced by its caves. See also Matsya P , xliii 29 about Karkoṭaka

3 Or more correctly, Konkanas. They are the inhabitants of the modern Konkan, the Māiāthi-speaking lowland strip between the Western Ghats and the sea, from about Bombay southward to Goa. The Hari-Vamśa says king Sagara degraded these people (xiv 784)

4 These people are not mentioned in the dictionary and I have not met with them elsewhere. Perhaps the reading should be the Sarvas, i e , "the Nāgas," or the Śāravas who are named in M Bh (Bhīśma P , I 2084, unless this be a mistake for Śāvaras)

5 See page 256 note

6 This is not doubt the same as Venyā, the name of two rivers in the Dekhan, see chap 54, verses 24 and 26. Either river is admissible in this passage, but the Wain-ganga is meant probably, because it flows through territory occupied by aboriginal tribes

7 See page 268 note and page 271 note

8 Or, better, Dāsa-puras, the people of Dasa-pura. This was the capital of king Rantideva (Megha D , I 46-48) and seems from the context there to have been situated on or near the R Chambal in its lower portion. But the two accounts of Ranta-deva (M Bh , Drona P , lxvii, and Śānti P , xxix 1013-22) describe him as exercising boundless hospitality chiefly with animal food and fancifully explain the origin of the river, Carmanvatī, as the juices from the piles of the hides of the slaughtered animals, this suggests that he reigned along the upper portion of the river

9 Or Ākaṇin. Neither is in the dictionary and I have not found them elsewhere

11 The Canarese Karnāṭa properly comprises the south-west portion of the Nizam's Dominions and all the country west of that as far as the Western Ghats and south of that as far as the Nilgiri. It did not include any part of the country below the Ghats, but its application has been greatly distorted by the Mohammedans and English. The name is probably derived from two Dravidian words meaning "black country," because of the "black cotton-soil" of the plateau of the Southern Dekhan (Caldwell, Grammar of the Dravidian Languages, 34 and 35, and Hunter's Imp Gaz Of India, Art Karnāṭik). The Karnāṭ akas are mentioned in the Bhīśma P list (ix 366)

12 Go-narda is given in the dictionary as the name of a people in the Dekhan, but I have not found either form elsewhere. Goa is said to have had a large number of names in ancient times, but this does not appear to have been one of them (Imp Gaz Of India, Art Goa)

13 The people of Citra-kūta, it appears to have been the range of hills (comprising the modern mount Chitratkut) extending from south of Allahabad to about Panna near the R Ken (see Journal, R A S , 1894, p 239), but these people are very much out of place here

15 This name does not seem to be connected with the Kolas who are mentioned in verse 25. The Kolagiras are not doubt the same as the Kalvgirayas, who are placed in South India in the description of Arjuna's following the sacrificial horse (Āśvamedh P , lxxxiii 2475-7), and they would presumably be the inhabitants of Kolagiri, which is placed in South India in the account of Sahadeva's conquests there and which appears to have been an extensive region for the whole of it is spoken of (Sabhā P , xxx 1171). Kolagiri may mean "the hills belonging to the Kols," but the Kols seem to be intended by the Kolas in verse 25. Kolagira may be compared with Kodagu, the ancient name of Coorg, which means 'steep mountains' (Imp Gaz Of India, Art Coorg) and might therefore have led to the modification of the final part of the name to agree with the Sanskrit giri but see page 281 note. The name Kolagira somewhat resembles the Golāngula of chap 54, verse 45, and Golāngula might be a corruption of Kodungalūr, which is the modern town Cranganore, 18 miles north of Cochin. It had a good harbour in early times and was a capital town in the 4th century A D. Syrian Christians were established there before the 9th century and the Jews had a settlement there which was probably still earlier. It is considered of great sanctity by both Christians and Hindus (Imp Gaz Of India, Art, Kodungalūr)

16 Jaṭā-dhara, the dictionary gives it as a proper name. Jaṭā also means "long tresses of hair twisted or braided together and coiled in a knot over the head so as to project like a horn from the forehead or at other times allowed to fall carelessly over the back and shoulders"

17 This was not doubt the country of which Krauñcapura was the capital, for dvīpa appears to have had the meaning of "land enclosed between two rivers, the modern doab, of Śākala-dvīpa, the doab in which Śākala (see page 257 note) was situated and the Seven dvīpas all in North India (Sabhā P , xxv 998-9). The Hari-Vamśa says Śārasa, one of Yadu's sons, founded Krauñcapura in the South region in a district where the soil was copper coloured and champaka and avoka trees abounded, and his country was known as Vana-vāsi or Vana-vāsin (xcv 5213 and 5231-3), and also that town was near the Sahya Mountains and was situated apparently south of a river Khaṭvāngī and north of Gomantā hill (xcvi 5325-40) If Gomantā was the modern Goa, these indications agree fairly well with the Krauñcālaya forest mentioned in the Rāmāy (Aran K., lxxiv 7), which appears to have been situated between the Godāvāri and Bhīma rivers (Journal, R A S., 1894, page 250) But the town Bana-vāsi or Banavāsi, which was a city of note in early times, is in the North Kanara district, on the R. Wards (tributary of the Gungabhadra), 14 miles from Siris, in latitude 14° 33' N., longitude 75° 5' E. (Imp Gaz Of India Art Banavasi, Arch Surv of W India, No 10, pp 60 note and 100), and this is south of Goa This was the country of the Vana-vāsakas (see page 265 note)

- 2 These are, not doubt, the people of Nasik, see page 268 note
- 3 The text is Śankha-sukty-ādi-vaiddūrya-saila, which may be so rendered as to make Śankha and Sukti two of the hills which compose the Vaidūrya chain I have not met with them elsewhere and neither is in the dictionary as the name of a hill Sukti can hardly be an error for the Suktimat range (see page 254 note)
- 4 This is the Satpura range, for the Pāṇḍavas in their pilgrimage went from Vidarbha and the river Payoṣṇī (the Purna and Tapti, see page 250 note), across these mountains, to the river Narmadā (Vana P, cxx and cxxi) This range was placed in the Southern region (ibid, lxxxviii 8343), and also apparently, as Vaidūrya-śikhara, in the Western reign (ibid, lxxxix 8359-61), and in the former of these two passages it is called mani-maya
- 5 I have not found this name elsewhere, nor is it in the dictionary
- 6 See page 264 note, but the passages cited there with reference to this people appear to refer to the Kolagiras, see page 280 note The Kola are a collection of aboriginal tribes, who are said to have dwelt in Bihar in ancient times, but who now inhabit the mountainous districts and plateaux of Chutia Nagpur and are to be found to a smaller extent in the Tributary States of Orissa and in some districts of the Central Provinces (Imp Gaz Of India, Art Kol)

- 12 I have not found this name elsewhere Comparing the various readings, it seems to have some connection with the Kusumas of chap 54, verse 46, see page 264 note
- 13 This is not in the dictionary, and I have not found it elsewhere Perhaps it is to be connected with the Okhalakīyas mentioned in Arch Surv of W India, no 10, pp 34-35
- 14 Or as the text may be read, Sapīśikas Piśika is in the dictionary, but I have not met with either name elsewhere
- 15 I have not found this name elsewhere and it is not in the dictionary Perhaps the reading should be Kambu-nāyakas or Kombu-nāyakas and mean the people of Coorg "According to tradition, Coorg was at this period (16th century A D) divided into 12 kombus or districts, each ruled by an independent chieftain, called a nāyak" (Imp Gaz Of India, Art Coorg) The similarity of the names is very remarkable
- 16 This name is not in the dictionary and I have not met with it elsewhere Perhaps it should be Kārusas (see page 268 note) and the people intended are a southern branch of that nation
- 17 These are the people mentioned in the Rāmāy (Kīsk K., xli 16) and M Bh (Karna P, viii 237) and Harī Vamśa (cxix 6724-6) There was also a river called the Rśikā (M Bh, Vana P, xii 493) which may be connected with the same people I have found no further data for fixing their position See page 264 note, the Mūśikas mentioned there may perhaps be the people dwelling on the R. Musī, the tributary of the Kṛstna on which Hyderabad stands (Imp Gaz of India, Art Kṛstna)
- 18 I have not met this name elsewhere nor is it in the dictionary Perhaps it refers to the descendants of ascetics, see page 268 note
- 19 These are, no doubt, the inhabitants of Rśabha-parvata mentioned in the M Bh (Vana P, lxxxv 8163-4) and placed there between Śrī-parvata and the Kāvīrī Śrī-parvata is on the Kṛstna in the Karnul district (see page 245, note) The Rśabha hills are therefore probably the southern portion of the Eastern Ghats, but none of the ranges there appears to have any name resembling this
- 20 The people of Ceylon they are named in the M Bh, it is said the Śiṃha king attended Yudhiṣṭhira's Rāja-sūya sacrifice (Sabhā P, xxxiii 1271, and Vana P, li 1989), and the Simhalas brought to him present of lupis lazuli, which is the essence of the sea (samudra-sāra) and abundance of pearls and elephants' housings (Sabhā P, li 1893-4). They are also named as fighting on the Kauravas' side in the great war (Droṇa P., xx. 798). This name is not I believe given to Ceylon in the Rāmāy., but the name Sīmhikā is given to a terrible female Rākṣasa who dwelt in the middle of the sea between India and Ceylon and whom Hanūmān killed as he leapt across to the island (Kīṣk. K., xli. 38; and Sund. K., viii. 5-13).

1. This is Kāñcī-puram or Kāñcī-varam, the modern Conjevaram, about 37 miles south-west of Madras. It is not, I believe, mentioned in the Rāmāy., or M.Bh., unless the Kāñcyas who are named as fighting in the great war (Karma P., xii. 459) are the people of this town, but the proper reading there should probably be Kāśyas, the people of Kāśī or Benares. Conjevaram, nevertheless, is a place of special sanctity and is one of the seven holy cities of India. Hwen Thsang speaks of it in the 7th century A.D. as the capital of Drāviḍa. It was then a great Buddhist centre, but about the 8th century began a Jan epoch and that was succeeded by a period of Hindu predominance (Imp. Gaz. of India, Art. Conjevaram).
2. This form is not in the dictionary; but is no doubt the same as Tailanga or Tri-linga, that is Telinga, the modern Telugu country. It coincided more or less with the ancient kingdom of Andhra (see page 266 note). I have not found this name in any shape in the Rāmāy., or M.Bh., Andhra is the name which occurs in those books.
3. This probably means "the valleys of the Kuñjara hills," and the reference may be to mount Kuñjara, which is mentioned in the Rāmāy. as situated in the South, but not in a clear manner (Kīṣk. K., xli. 50). I have not met the name elsewhere, but as this place is joined with Kaccha in one compound (see next note) it may mean part of the Travancore hills, Kuñjara-darī is given in the dictionary as the name of a place.
4. This is Kochchī, the modern Cochin, in Travancore. It is not I believe mentioned in the Rāmāy. or M.Bh., except once in the latter book in the account of Sahadeva's conquests in the South (Sabhā P., xxx. 1176). Both Christians and Jews are said to have settled here early in the Christian era, and they were firmly established here by the 8th century.
5. This is the name of the modern river Chittar in the extreme South (see page 252, note) and also of the district near it. It appears, moreover, to be the name of a hill in the extreme South (Bhīṣma P., vi. 252). It is also the name of a town in Ceylon, after which the name was extended to the whole island (dictionary). The island seems to be meant by the words Tāmrahvaya dvīpa in the M.Bh. (Sabhā P., xxx. 1172).

6. Vāhya-pādas; the right hind foot is meant as is stated expressly in verse 33, but (because perhaps this word is vague) the names that follow are sadly confused and belong to all regions in the west and north-west.
7. See page 259, note; they are out of place here.
8. See page 256, note; these also are out of place.
9. This should perhaps be connected with Baḍavā, a tirtha apparently in Kashmir (M.Bh., Vana P., lxxxii. 5034-42). A river of the same name is mentioned (id., ccxxi. 14232), but that seems from its context to be rather in South India. Baḍavā-mukha (which means 'submarine fire') may also mean "having faces like mares"; and a people called Aśva-mukhas are mentioned in Matsya Purāṇa, cxx. 58, as dwelling north of the Himalayas : see also verse 43 below.
10. See page 257 note they are hardly in place here.
11. See page 257, note; these are out of place here.
12. See page 268 note. The name is derived from an eponymous king Ānarta, who was the son of Śaryāti one of the sons of Manu Vaivasvata (Hari V., x. 613 and 642-9).
13. "Those who have faces like women." I have not met this name elsewhere. It seems, however, to be a proper name and not an adjective.
14. This as a name is not in the dictionary, and I have not found it elsewhere.
15. Or "and the Argigas or Ārgigas," as the text may be read. These names are not in the dictionary and I have not met with them elsewhere. Perhaps the correct reading should be Śaryātas. They were a tribe, so-called from their chief Śaryāta the Mānava, who settled down near where the ṛṣi wrath (Śata-P. Brāh., IV. i. 5). He is called Śaryāti in the M.Bh. (Vana P., ccxi. 10312; and ccxii.) where the same story is told rather differently; and also in the Hari-Vaṛṣa, where he is said to be a son of Manu and progenitor of Ānarta and the kings of Ānarta (x. 613 and 642-9). From all these passages it appears the Śaryātas were in the West, in Gujarat and Cyavana as a Bhārgava is always placed in the West, near the mouths of the Narbada and Tapti. But perhaps the most probable reading is Bhārgavas; they were in the West (see page 255, note).

2 This name is not in the dictionary and I have not found it elsewhere. It can have nothing to do with Karna one of the heroes of the M Bh, for he reigned in Aṅga in the East. Prādhya means a descendant of Prādhā, one of Dakṣa's daughters and that also is inadmissible. It suggests Rādhyea, which was a metronymic of Karna, but that is equally unsuitable. It seems therefore the words must be taken as a whole forming one name and then it suggests comparison with Karna-prāvāra which would be the same as Karna-prāvāra (see page 272, note)

3 See page 259, note. This word is compounded with the preceding name, it hardly seems to be in place here

4 See page 260, note, they seem to be out of place here, unless any Kirātas inhabited the southern part of the Aravalli hills or the extreme western part of the Vindhya mountains and that seems improbable. See also Adhama-Kairātas in verse 44 below and Kirātas are mentioned again in verse 50

5 See page 258, note, they seem to be out of place here

6 These people are out of place here, see page 264, note, they should be properly in the right flank

7 I have not met this name elsewhere, but, no doubt, it denotes some people, who claimed descent from Parāśrama and who would therefore be somewhere on the western coast between Bombay and the Narmadā, see page 255, note. It is said there was a dynasty of Pāraśava kings after the great Paurava line came to an end (Matsya Purāna, I 73-76) but it does not appear where

8 This is not in the dictionary and I have not met it elsewhere. It suggests a connection with the Kālibalas of chap 54, verse 49, but Kala also means, "emitting a low or inarticulate sound," and it was an old fable that a people existed, who could not speak articulately, but hissed like serpents, see Mandeville's Travels, chap xviii. And xix. Kala occurs again in verse 36

9 I have not found this elsewhere as the name of a people. The word however means "a rogue" and may be an adjective to Haima-girikas

10 The people of Hemagiri. This is not given as the name of a place in the dictionary, but it may be a synonym for Hema-kūta or Hema-śṛṅga. It is said in the M Bh the latter is the portion of Himavat from which the Ganges issued formerly (Ādi P, clxx 6454-5) and Hiranya-śṛṅga is probably the same (Bhīṣma P, vi 237). Hema-kūta was near the rivers Nandā and Aparā-nandā and between the sources of the Ganges and Kauśikī (Vana P, cx 9968-87) and it is alluded to in other passages but they are not clear (e.g. id, clxxxix 12917, Bhīṣma P, vi 198, 202, 236 and 246). The last of these passages says the Guhyakas dwell on Hema-kūta. The Matsya Purāna says Hema-śṛṅga is south-east of Kailāsa and the R. Lauhtya or Brahmaputra, rises at its foot (cxx 10-12), and that two rivers rise in Hema-kūta which flow into the eastern and western seas (ibid, 64-5)

11 This seems to be erroneous, yet it is not easy to suggest an amendment. The first part, no doubt, refers to the R. Sindhu and the Sindhu people but the latter part appears unintelligible. Perhaps the reading should be Sindhu-kūla-suvrakāh or Sindhavāc ca suvtrakāh meaning the Sindhus and the Suvras (see page 257, note), but these two people have been mentioned already in verse 30

13 See page 258, note. They are quite out of place here

14 The Drāvidas are often alluded to in the M Bh (e.g. Sabhā P, xxxiii 1271, Vana P, li 1988, Karna P, xii 454), but are not mentioned in the Rāmāy, I believe, except in the geographical canto (xli 18). They are sometimes closely connected with the Pāndyas (Sabhā P, xxx 1174), but the name was applied in a general way to denote the southern branches of the races now classed as Dravidian and it is the same as Tamil (Caldwell's Grammar of the Dravidian Languages, pp 12-15). Their territory included the sea coast in early times (Vana P, cxviii 10217). It is also said they were Ksatriyas and became degraded from the absence of brāhmanas and the extinction of sacred rites (Anuśās P, xxxiii 2104-5, Manu, x 43-44)

15 I have not met this name elsewhere. It means "dwelling by the ocean," and is probably an epithet of Drāvidas, for they bordered on the sea as mentioned in the last note

17 Or Anu-rādhā

18 I have not met this elsewhere. It may be the same as Mt Manimat (Drona P, lxxx 2843), appears to be also intended in Vana P, lxxxii 5043 and if so would denote the range of hills enclosing Kashmir on the south, according to the context. It may also be the same as the "jewelled mountain Su-megha" mentioned in the Rāmāy (Kṛṣṇ K, xliii 40)

19 This is not in dictionary and I have not found it elsewhere

- 1 This does not appear to be the name of any particular mountains, but rather denoted in a vague way mountains in the west behind which the sun sets. It is mentioned in the Rāmāy as Astagiri (Kīsk K., xxxvii 22), and as Asta-parvata (id., xliii 54).
- 2 See note to Aparāntas, page 256, note. This half line Aparāntikā Haihayasca is a syllable too long, it would be better to read either Aparāntā or omit the ca.
- 3 The Haihayas were a famous race, the descendants of an eponymous king Haihaya, who is said to have been a grandson or great-grandson of Yadu, the eldest son of Yayāti (Hari V., xxxiii 1843-4, and Matsya Purāna, xliii 4-8). Yadu is said to have been king of the north-east region (Hari V., xxx 1604, 1618), but the references to the earliest movements of the Haihayas are hardly consistent. Mahiṣmat, who was fourth in descent from Haihaya, is said to have founded the city Mahiṣmatī on the Narmadā (see page 265, note, and id., xxxiii 1846-7), and his son Dhadrāsrenya is said to have reigned in Kāśī or Benares, which the Vīṭahavya branch of the Haihayas had previously conquered from its king Haryasva, but Haryasva's grandson Divodāsa defeated them and regained his capital (M Bh., Anuśās P., xxx 1949-62, Hari V. xxix 1541-6, and xxxii 1736-40). The great king Arjuna Kārtavīrya, who was ninth in descent (Hari V. xxxiii 1850-90, and Matsya P., xliii 13-45), reigned in Anūpa and on the Narmadā and had the great conflict with Rāma Jāmadagnya, which ended in the overthrow of the Haihayas (M Bh., Vana P., cxvi 10189—cxvii 10204, and Śānti P., xlix 1750-70, and pages 258 note, and 344 note). The Haihayas and Tālaṅghas in alliance with Śakas, Yavanas, Kāmbojas and Pahlavas are said to have driven Bāhu king of Ayodhyā out of his realm, but his son Sagara drove them out and recovered the kingdom (Vana P. cvi 8831-2 and Hari V., xiii 760—xiv 783). The Haihaya race comprised the following tribes, Vīṭhotras (or Vīṭahavyas), Śāryatas, Bhojas, Avantis, Taundīkeras (or Kundīkeras) and Tālaṅghas, the Bharatas, Sujāṭayas and Yādavas are added, and the Sūrasenas, Ānartas and Cedis also appear to have sprung from them (Hari V., xxxiv 1892-6, and Matsya P., xliii 46-49). Comparing the territories occupied by these tribes it appears the Haihaya race dominated nearly all the region south of the Jumna and Aravalli hills as far as the valley of the Tapti inclusive of Gujarat in ancient times (see pages 265 note, 266 note, 269 note, 270 note, 271 all the notes, and above) and Cunningham says that two great Haihaya States in later times had their capitals at Manipur in Mahā Kosala (or Chhattisgarh) and at Tripura (or Tewar) on the Narbada (Arch. Surv. Repts., IX 54-57).
- 4 I have not met this elsewhere, and it is not in the dictionary as the name of a people. It may be the same as the Śāvikas (M Bh., Bhīṣma P., ix 354, perhaps the Śāsakas in Vana P., cxliii 15257 are the same), or the reading may be Śākalas, the people of Śākala, the capital of Madra (see page 257, note).

- 5 This is not in the dictionary and I have not met it elsewhere. It appears to be a proper name and not an adjective.
- 6 This is not in the dictionary and I have not found it elsewhere. Perhaps the reading should be Kokenadas, a people in the north-west classed with the trigartas and Darvas (M Bh., Sabhā P., xxvi 1026), or Kokarakas who seem to be the same (Bhīṣma P., ix 369).
- 7 This is given in the dictionary as the name of a people, but I have not met it elsewhere. Perhaps a better reading would be Pañcodakas or Pañcanadas, "the people living beside the R. Pañcananda," which appears to be the single stream formed by the confluence of the five rivers of the Punjab (M Bh., Vana P., lxxxii 5025, Bhīṣma P., lvi 2406, and dictionary), but this name seems to be also applied to the five rivers collectively (Vana P., ccxxi 14229) and to the country watered by those five rivers (Sabhā P., xxxi 1193, Udyoga P., iii 82, and xviii 596-601, Karna P., xlv 2100 and 2110, Hari V., xcii 5018 and Rāmāy., Kīsk K., xliii 21) and to the inhabitants of it (Bhīṣma P., lvi 2406, and Karna P., xlv 2086) see also Lassen's map (Ind. Alt.).
- 8 This is given in the dictionary as the name of a people, but I have not found it elsewhere. Perhaps a better reading would be Vānavas, who are mentioned in the M Bh. (Vana P., ix 362) or Vanāyavas. There was a district called Vanāyu or Vānāyu, which appears to have been situated in the north-west and which was famous for its breed of horses (M Bh., Bhīṣma P., xci 3974, Drona P., cxxi 4831, Karna P., vii 200, and Rāmāy., Ādi K., vi 24). It appears to be the modern Bunnit in the north west of the Punjab.
- 9 This is not given as the name of a people and the word means, "low", and "western". This name may be compared with Aparas, a people mentioned in the Rāmāy (Kīsk K., xliii 23), and see page 256, note and Aparāntikas in verse 34. But a better reading for the text hy-avaras is perhaps Varvaras, see page 258, note and page 259, note.
- 10 This is not in the dictionary and I have not met with it elsewhere, but Tāraksati and Tāraksiti are given as the name of a district to the west of Madhya-deśa. There was also a kingdom called Turuska in later times (Arch. Surv. of W. India, Memo No. 10, p. 7). The Turuskas are the Turks, and their country Turkestan. A people called Tārkyas are mentioned in M Bh., Sabhā P., li 1871.
- 11 I have not found this elsewhere and it is not in the dictionary. A place called Anga-loka is assigned to the west in the Rāmāy (Kīsk K., xliii 8) and Angas and Anga-lokyas are mentioned to the north of India in the Matsya Purāna (cix 44 and 45).
- 12 This is not in the dictionary and I have not found it elsewhere. A river Śarkarāvartā is mentioned (Bhāgavata Purāna V., xix 17), but appears to be in the south. A great house-holder and theologian Jana Śarkarākya is alluded to (Chāndogya Up. V., xi 1). Perhaps the reading may be the Śālma-veśmakas,¹ the Guru-svaras,² the Phalgunakas³ and the people who dwell by the river Venu-matī⁴ and the Phalgulukas,⁵ the Ghoias⁶ and the Guruhas⁷ and the Kala,⁸ the Ekeksanas,⁹ the Vāji-keśas,¹⁰ the Dirgha-grīvas¹¹ and the Cūlikas¹² and the Aśva-keśas,¹³ these peoples are situated in the Tortoise's tail.

- 1 This is not in the dictionary, and I have not found it elsewhere. It suggests śāla-veśmakas, "those who live in houses with spacious rooms," and it may be an adjective to Sarkaras. Perhaps we should read Śālvās as the first part of the word (see page 273, note) but, if so, the latter part seems unrecognizable.
- 2 I have not met with this elsewhere, and it is not in the dictionary. It may be an adjective, "deep-voiced," describing the Phalgunakas. Perhaps the reading should be Gurjaras. They appear to have been settled in the Punjab or Upper Singh and to have been driven out by the Balas about 500 A.D., and pushed gradually southward, till at length they occupied the country around the peninsula of Kathiawar, thence called Gujarat after them (Cunningham, Arch. Surv. Repts., II 64-72). Or perhaps the reading might be Gurusthala, a river Guru-nadī is mentioned in the west region, but without data to identify it (Hari V, clxviii 9516-8).
- 3 Or better, Phalgunakas. I have not met with it elsewhere. A similar name Phalgulukas occurs just below.
- 4 This is not in the dictionary, and I have not met with it elsewhere. It occurs again in verse 39. A people called Venikas are mentioned in the M Bh., (Bhīṣma P., I 2097).
- 5 This resembles Phalgunakas above. I have not found it elsewhere. A mountain called Phena-giri or Phala-giri is mentioned in the Rāmāy as situated in the west near the mouth of the Indus (Kisk K., xliii 13-17 and Annotations).
- 6 There are no doubts the same as the Ghorakas mentioned in the M Bh., Sabhā P., I 1870, but I have not found any data to fix their position.
- 7 I have not met this elsewhere, but it is stated in the dictionary to be the name of a people in Madhya-deśa, and the word is also written Guduha, Gulaha and Guluha.
- 8 This has occurred before in verse 31.
- 9 "The one-eyed." It was an old belief that such people existed. "Men with only one eye in their forehead" are mentioned in the M Bh., (Sabhā P., I 1837), the Cyclopes are famous in Greek and Latin literature and a one-eyed race is spoken of as dwelling somewhere in the Indian Ocean by Mandeville (Travels, Chap. 17).
- 10 "Those who have hair or manes, like horses." I have met no such name elsewhere, except that the synonymous name Aśva-keśas occurs in the next line of this verse. Neither is it in the dictionary.
- 11 "The long-necks." I have met no such name elsewhere.
- 12 This name is the same as the Culikas mentioned in chap. 54, verse 40, but the position does not quite agree, these

And so situated also are the three constellations Āindra,¹⁴ Mūla and Pūrvā Āṣādhā. The Māṇḍavyas¹⁵ and Caṇḍakhāras¹⁶ and Aśvakālanatas¹⁷ and the Kūnyatāladahas,¹⁸ the are in the west and the others in the north. A people Vindhā-cūlikas are named in the Bhīṣma P. I st (ix 369) and appear to be in the north. A dynasty of kings called Cūlikas is said to have reigned after the great Paurava line came to an end (Matsya Purāna, I 73-76).

- 13 "Those who have hair or manes, like horses." It is the same as Vāji-keśas mentioned above.
- 14 For Āindra-mūlam read Āndram mūlam. Āindra is the same as Jyesthā.
- 15 They are mentioned again in verse 46. They may be a tribe which claimed descent from the ṛṣi Māṇḍavya, to whom Janaka king of Videha is said to have sung a song (M Bh., Śānti P., cclxxvii) and whose hermitage is alluded to, as situated somewhere perhaps between Oudh and North Bihar (Udyoga P., clxxxvii 7355), but Māṇḍavya-pura is said in the dictionary to be situated on the R. Godāvarī. A people called Maṇḍika are mentioned in the M Bh. (Vana P., ccliii 15243). The Vīmāṇḍavyas are named in verse 6 above.
- 16 I have not met this name elsewhere, nor is it in the dictionary, but it suggests Kandahar and the position agrees. A people Carma-khaṇḍikas are mentioned in chap. 54, verse 36.
- 17 This seems a compound. The first part appears to be the Aśvakas, they are mentioned in the M Bh. (Bhīṣma P., ix 351), and are placed in the north-west and identified with the Aspasī and Assakanī by Lassen (Ind. Atl., Map). The latter part however is very doubtful. A people Lalitthas are mentioned in the M Bh. (Drona P., xvii 692) and appears from the context to have been a north-western race.
- 18 This appears to mean the same people as the Kanyakāgunas of the Bhīṣma P. I st (ix 360). It seems to be a compound, but the component names are very uncertain. The latter part may be Laḍakas, they are mentioned in the M Bh. (Bhīṣma P., I 2083), though there are no data to identify them, but Laḍaha is given in the dictionary as the name of a people. As regards the first part Kuṣapa and Kuṇaha are given in the dictionary as the name of a people, and Kulatthas are mentioned in the M Bh. (Bhīṣma P., ix 373) and Matsya Purāna (cxx 44).

Strī-vāhyas¹ and the Bālikas² and the Nṛsimhas³ who dwell on the Veṇumatī⁴ and the other people who dwell in Valāva⁵ and the Dharma-baddhas,⁶ the Alūkas,⁷ the people who occupy Uur-karma⁸—these peoples are in the Tortoise's left hind⁹ foot.¹⁰ as a people to the north of India. 1 country Kolūka is placed in the west in the Rāmāy., and Kolūta seems to be another name for it (Kīṣk. K., xliii. 8 and Annotations). A country Kulūta is also mentioned in the M.Bh. (Karma P., xii. 475 and 485).

1. I have not met this elsewhere and it is not in the dictionary. It may perhaps mean "those who live apart from women;" but the reading is more probably Strī-rājya. This was the name of a country and people, mentioned in the M.Bh. and situated apparently north of the Himalayas, near the Hūṇas and Tanjānas (Vana P., li. 1991; and Sānti P., iv. 114). Strī-loka is mentioned apparently as a place north-west of India in an alternative reading to Rāmāy., Kīṣk. K., xliii. 20 (Gorresio's Edition, Annotations).
2. This is not in the dictionary and I have not found it elsewhere. The reading should probably be Bāhlikas or Vāhlikas, see page 255, note.
3. "The men-lions." I have not met this elsewhere and it is not in the dictionary s the name of a people.
4. This is not in the dictionary and I have not found any river of this name in the north-west. It has been mentioned in verse 36 above.
5. Valāva-stha; this might also be read as Vala + avasthā. I have not met either word elsewhere. A town or river Balākā is mentioned in the M.Bh. as situated in North India (Anuśās. P., xxv. 1706).
6. "Those who are firmly attached to the Law"; or perhaps Dharmabuddha, "those who are enlightened in the law." It seems to be an adjective rather than a proper name and may qualify Alūkas. I have not met with it elsewhere as a proper name and the nearest resemblance to it is Bāhubādha of the Bhīṣma P. list (ix. 362); see page 258, note. The Madhumattas of the same list (ix. 360) are probably the same people.
7. This is not in the dictionary and I have not found it elsewhere. The people intended are no doubt the Ulūkas and the text should read tatholūkā instead of tathālūkā. For the Ulūkas see page 272, note.
8. I have not met this elsewhere and it is not in the dictionary. It is perhaps to be connected with the Uṛṇas; see page 261, note. A people called Urdamarus are placed in the north in the Matsya Purāṇa (cx. 48).
9. For pārśve read paśce ?
10. This verse closes with the word bhāgure; it is not in the dictionary and seems to be erroneous. Should the reading be bhāsure, "brilliant," an epithet to Āṣādhā and Śravaṇā?

Where also Āṣādhā and Śravaṇā and Dhaniṣṭhā are situated. The mountains Kailāsa¹¹ and Himavat, Dhanuṣ-mat¹² and Vasu-mat,¹³ the Krauñcas¹⁴ and the Kurus¹⁵ and Vakas,¹⁶ and the people who are called Kṣudra-viṇas,¹⁷ the Rasālayas,¹⁸ and the Kaikeyas,¹⁹ the Bhoga-prasthas,²⁰

11. This mountain is of course constantly mentioned throughout Sanskrit literature and the references indicate that it was on the north of the middle portion of the Himalaya range. The name is given in modern maps to the range of mountains which is situated immediately north of the Mānasa lakes, and in which the Indus rises.
12. This is given in the dictionary, but I have not met with it elsewhere. It may perhaps refer to Himavat; see chap. 54, verse 59, where the range is compared to a bow in shape.
13. I have not found this elsewhere and it is not in the dictionary as the name of a hill. It may perhaps mean "abounding in wealth" and qualify Himavat.
14. These are no doubt the people who dwell near the Krauñca group of mountains. This group is called the son of Maināka, which is called the son of Himavat and therefore appears to have been a portion of the Maināka mountains in the great Himavat mountains system (Hari V., xviii. 941-2). It is mentioned in the Rāmāy. as having lake Mānasa on its summit with Maināka lying beyond (Kīṣk. K., xlv. 32-37); but in the Megha-dṛta Krauñca is placed south of that lake and there is said to be a pass through it leading to the lake (I. 58 and 59 with commentary). The pass must apparently be the valley of the source of the Sarju or Ghogra and the Krauñca mountains would therefore be the portion of the Himalayas chain bounding Nepal at the extreme north-west.
15. These must be the Uttara Kurus, see page 271, note. The Kurus in Madhya-deśa have been mentioned in verse 9 above.
16. These are mentioned in the dictionary, but I have not found them elsewhere. A people called Varvas are alluded to in the Matsya Purāṇa (cx. 47).
17. "Those who have small lutes." This is not in the dictionary and I have not met with it elsewhere. A people called Kṣudrakas are mentioned in the M. Bh. (Karma-P., v-137); they lived in north India and are generally named in conjunction with the Mālavas (Sabhā-P., ii. 1871; Bhīṣma-P., ii. 2106; lxxxviii. 3853; Droṇa-P., lxx. 2436), and are said to be the Greek, Oxydraci.
18. I have not found this elsewhere. It may mean "those who dwell near the river Raśā" which is mentioned in the Rg-V. (x 75, 6). I have met with no other allusion to it, but Dr. Muir thinks it is probably are affluent of the Indus (Sansk. Texts, II. 356 and 357).
20. I have not met with this word elsewhere, though it is given in the dictionary as the name of a people. Perhaps the reading should be Bhoja-prastha, as a synonym of Bhoja-nagara, which is mentioned in the M.Bh. as the capital of king Uśīnara or Uśīnara, father of king Śīvi (Udyoga-P, cxvii), both of whom were famous monarchs and are often alluded to in the M-Bh (e.g., Vana-P, cxxx 10582-94, cxvii 13274, Droṇa-P, lviii, and Śānti-P, xxix 932-7) According to the genealogies given (Hari-T, xxxi 1674-9, and Matsya Purāna, xlviii 15-21) various Panjab races claimed descent from Uśīnara, but the name Uśīnara's was especially appropriated to the descendants of Śīvi (Vana-P, oxxx 10582) The Uśīnara's are alluded to occasionally (e.g., Karna-P, v 137, Aitar Brāh-, viii 3, 14, and Kauṣīt-Up., iv 1), but Śīvi or Sibi is the name which is generally used in the M-Bh From these passages and others (e.g., Sabhā-P, xxxi 1189, li 1870, Vana-P, cxci, 13249-55, cclxv, cclxx 15718 and 15743, Bhīṣma-P, xviii 688-90, and li 2104) it appears the Śīvis were grouped with the Trigartas, Madras, and other Panjab nations on one side and with the Kōrus, Śūrasenas and Matsyas on the other side, that is, with all the nations which surrounded Brahmāvarta, and that their territory was near the Jumna and close to Tri-viṣṭapa or Tri-piṣṭapa which was part of Brahmāvarta, (Vana-P, cxxx 10556-cxxx 10595, with lxxxiii 6054-5 and 7073-8, and page 245, note) The Śīvis or Uśīnara's therefore appear to have possessed the country at the upper part of the Sarasvatī, Dṛṣad-vatī and Jumna, from Saha-ranpur to Patiala, with the Ambaṣṭhas to the north-west (see page 244 note) In later times they shared the degradation which the brāhmanas pronounced on the nations of the north-west because of the absence of brāhmanas among them (Anuśās -P, xxxiii 2103)

1 These are mentioned in the Bhīṣma-P list (ix 358) and were the people who inhabited the Yāmuna hills The Pāndavas in returning from their visit beyond, the Himalayas came to the Yāmuna hills, and then to the Sarasvatī (Vana-P, clxxvii 12346-62), The hosts collected on the Kauravas' side before the great war overpread all the country from Pañca-nada (the Panjab) to Ahicchatra (see page 275 note) including the Yāmuna hills (Udyoga-P, xviii 596-601) Hence it appears these hills were the portion of the Himalayas, in which the Jumna has its sources, and which separate it from the Sutlej

The Antar-dvīpas,² and the Trigartas,³ the Agniyyas,⁴ the Sārdana peoples,⁵ the Aśva-mukhas⁶ also, the Prāptas,⁷ the long-haired Cīviḍas,⁸ the Dāserakas,⁹ the Vāṭa-dhānas,¹⁰ and the Śava-dhānas,¹¹ the Puskalas¹² And Adhīama Kairātas,¹³ and those -who are settled in Taksa-Śīlā,¹⁴

2 Dvīpa in this connexion cannot mean any island, and must mean a doab (see page 280, note) The Antar-dvīpas then would mean "those who dwell within the doabs" I have not met with this word elsewhere, and here it is probably an adjective to the Trigartas, to whom it is very appropriate

4 I have not found this elsewhere, and it is not in the dictionary The proper reading should no doubt be Āgneyas, They are mentioned in the M-Bh (Vana-P, ccliii 15256) A ṛṣi or man called Āgneya Sū-darsana is spoken of who dwelt in Kuru-kṣetra (Anuśās -P, ii 102-172), and the, Āgneya Ś'alya-kīrtana is alluded to in the same region (Rāmāy, Ayodh-K, lxviii 3) It seems probable therefore that the Āgneyas were a small tribe inhabiting the northern part of Kuru-kṣetra

5 Or perhaps "and the Ardana peoples" I have not met with either name elsewhere, nor are they in the dictionary

6 These are mentioned in the Matsya Purāna (cxx 58) The synonymous name Baḍavā-mukhas occurs in verse 30 above It may be noted here that it was an old belief there were people who had heads like dogs, Cynocephali (Pliny, vi 30, Mandeville's Travels, chap, xviii)

7 I have not found this elsewhere It may perhaps mean the people called Vudhras or Badhnas in the Bhīṣma-P list (ix 363)

8 This is not in the dictionary, but Cīvuka or Cīvuka is given I have not however met any of these names elsewhere The word cvpiṣṭa means "flat-nosed"

10 See page 255, note

11 This is not in the dictionary, and I have not found it elsewhere It seems to be formed on the same plan as Vāṭa-dhāna and Yāta-dhāna It may perhaps mean "those who place their dead in receptacles," yet it seems rather to be a name

13 The basest or rudest races of Kirātas, see page 260

14 The Greek Taxila It is mentioned in the M-Bh The name is generally connected with Taksaka king of the Nāgas it is said he killed Arjuna's grandson king Parikṣit according to a curse, and that king's son Janamejaya invaded Takṣa-śīlā and conquered it (Adi-P iii 682-3 and 832-4, xi-xliv and xlix 1954, 1 1991) It appears however to have been named from the Takkas, whose capital it was, and Cunningham has identified it near the modern Shah-dhūri or Dheri Shahan in the Punjab It was a large and famous city and the Takkas held all the country around (Arch Surv Repts, II 6, 111, 112, XIV 8) It appears to have contained a great Buddhist university also the Ambālas,¹ the Mālavas,² the Madras,³ the Venuks,⁴ and the Vadautikas,⁵ the Pingalas,⁶ the Māna-kalahas,⁷ the Hūnas,⁸ and the Kohalakas,⁹ the Māṇḍavyas,¹⁰ the Bhūti-yuvakas,¹¹ the Śātakas,¹² the Hema-tārakas,¹³ the Yaśo-

- 1 These would be the people of Ambala. This name is a late one. It may probably be derived from the old Ambastha, the name of a people often mentioned in the M Bh. They are said to have been descendants of king Uśi-nara and to have been closely related to the Sivas, see page 287, note (Hari-V, xxxi 1674-9, Matsya Purāna, xlviii 15-21). They were in the north-west and are generally mentioned along with north-western nations, especially the Sivas and Trigartas (M Bh., Sabhā-P, xxxi 1189, Bhīṣma-P, xviii 688-90, cxviii 5486, cxx 5649, and Drona-P, vii 183). It seems, very probable therefore that they occupied the country between Ambala, and the Sutlej with the Sivas on their east and south and the Trigartas on their north-west.
- 2 See page 268, note , but they are quite out of place here.
- 3 See page 264, note.
- 4 This is not in the dictionary, and I have not found it elsewhere. A people called Venikās are mentioned in M Bh., Bhīṣma-P, li 2097.
- 5 I have not met with this elsewhere.
- 6 These people are mentioned in the Rāmāyana, as situated in the West (Kisk-K, xliii, 23, alternative reading, Gorresio's Edition, Annotations). A river Piñjalā is included in the Bhīṣma-P list (ix 335. But perhaps Pingala is an adjective here, "light brown," and qualifies Hūnas, for the Huns appear to have been a light-complexioned people, see note below.
- 7 I have not met this as a name elsewhere. It may be an adjective, "quarrelsome through pride," and qualify the Hūnas.
- 8 The Huns. They are mentioned as an outside people to the north along with Cinās, &c, (Vana-P, li 1991, Bhīṣma-P ix 373, and Śānti-P, cccxxvii 12229), but are not often alluded to at first. In the Raghu-Vamśa they are placed on the northernmost part of the Indus, and the commentator calls them Mujjanapadākhyāḥ kṣatṛiyyāḥ (iv 67-68). They appear to have been of a light complexion, for their women are pictured as having made their cheeks pale red (pāṭala) by boating them in grief (ibid). For the Ephthalites or White Huns, see Cunningham's Arch. Surv. Repts., II 75-79. All the valley of the Upper Sutlej is called Hundes. A people called Hāra-hūnas are also alluded to in the M Bh. as an outside people to the north-west (Sabhā-P, xxxi .194, and 1844).
- 9 I have not found this elsewhere, but it seems to be the same as the Kokarakas (Bhīṣma-P, ix 369) and Kokanudas (Sabhā-P, xxvi 1026), both of whom appear to have been a tribe to the north of the Punjab.
- 10 See page 285, note 15.
- 11 I have not met this elsewhere. Perhaps it should be connected with Bhūti-laya, which was a place in the north of the Punjab (Karna-P, xlv 2062-3).
- 12 I have not found this elsewhere.
- 13 This is not in the dictionary and I have not met with it elsewhere.

- 14 I have not found this elsewhere, it seems to mean a people who live on a river Yaśo-matī.
- 15 See page 256, note.
- 16 I have not met this elsewhere and it is not in the dictionary. Certain Khara-patha countries are alluded to in the Matsya Purāna (cxx 56), but the name in the text should probably be split up into two names.
- 17 These people are generally mentioned along with the Trigartas, Madras and other Panjab nations (Sabhā-P, P 1870, and Karna-P, v 137), and the epithet adri-ja, "mountaineer," seems to be applied to them (Drona-P, cxi 7208). They are said to have been descended from king Uśura, like the Sivas and Ambasthas (Hari-V, xxxi 1674-8). I have not found any thing more to indicate their position, but judging from the portions of the Panjab occupied by other nations the Yaudheyas may perhaps be placed north of the Madras near Lahore.
- 18 Or Dāsamiyas, as they were also called (Sabhā-P, i) 1825). They were a people in the Panjab, they are called out-castes and are denounced in the Karna-P of the M Bh. like the other Panjab nations (xlv 2054-6, and 2069, and xlv 2090), but I have found no data to fix their position.
- 19 Rājanya means a "kṣatṛiyya" or "noble," but here it seems to be the name of a people. I have not found it as such elsewhere.
- 20 I have not met with this elsewhere and it is not in the dictionary.
- 21 I have not found this elsewhere. A king of Kulūta named Kṣema-dhūrti is mentioned in the M Bh. (Karna-P, xii 475, etc.)

And there is the constellation Vāruṇa,¹ there the two constellations of Prauṣṭha-padā² And the kingdom of the Yenas³ and Kinnaras,⁴ the country Praśupāla,⁵ and the country Kicaka,⁶ and the

1 Or Sata-bhīṣaj

2 They are Pūrva-bhādra-padā and Uttara-bhādra-padā

3 The word Yena must be a mistake, and the name meant should, no doubt, be joined with Kinnara-rājyam The proper reading may be either Yauna-kinnara-rājyam or better perhaps, Cina-kinnara-rājyam For Cinās, see page 259, note Yauna appears to be an abbreviated form of Yavana and is rarely met with (see M Bh, Sānti-P, cvii 7560), the Yavanas were in the north-west, see page 256, note, yet they are mentioned again in verse 62

4 The Kinnaras are said in the dictionary to be mythical beings with a human figure and the head of a horse, such creatures have been already alluded to, see Baḍavā-mūkhas in verse 30, and Aśva-mūkhas in verse 40 They were placed on Mount Gandha-mādana (Vana-P, cxliii 10964-8), an Mount Mandara (Droṇa-P, lxxx 2848-52, and generally in the central region of the Himalayas (Raghu-V, iv 78), and they are probably meant by the Kinkaras in Rāmāy, Kīṣk-K, xlv 13 The Kinnaras were to come extent identified with the Kimpuruṣas, though both are mentioned separately in the Matsya-Purana, cxx 48-49 It is stated in the dictionary that this occurred in later times, but the chief of the Kimpuruṣas is said in the M Bh to have dwelt at Gandha-mādana (Udyoga-P, clvii 5352) which was the Kinnaras' territory The Kimpuruṣas are described as forming a kingdom in the Pāṇḍavas' time and owning the country beyond Sveta-parvata (Sabhā-P, xxvii 1038-9, Hari-V, xcii 5013-5, and cxix 5493-5) They are alluded to as being men of an inferior type (Aitar Bran, II, i, 8), and as being forest-men (Sānti-P, clxix), and also as skilled in the use of the bow (Udyoga-P, clvii 5352)

5 This is, no doubt, a mistake for Paśu-pāla which is stated to be the name of a country and people to the north-east of Madhya-deśa (dict) They are mentioned along with Kirātas and Tanganas and are placed among the lower Himalayan ranges in the Rāmāy (Kīṣk-K, xlv 20) Another reading in that passage is Pāṃśapālas (see Annotations)

6 The text is sa-kīcakam This seems to be the region of the reeds or bamboos called kīcakas, they are said to line the banks of the R Sāilodā in the North (Rāmāy, Kīṣk-K, xlv 76-79, M-Bh., Sabhā-P, li 1858-9, and Raghu-V, iv 73) It is not clear where this country was The R Sāilodā is placed between Meru and Mandara in the passage from the M-Bh, and the Khasas, Pāradas and Tanganas dwelt near it The R Sāilo-dakā is said to rise at the foot of Mount Aruna, west of Kailāsa, in the Matsya Parāna (cxx 22-23)

A people called Kīcakas are mentioned in the M-Bh, as being near the Matsyas, Trigartas and Pāñcālas, i.e., in Madhya-deśa (Adi-P, clvi 6084-7), and Kicaka was the name of the general of Virāṭa king of Matsya (Virāṭu-P, xiv 376-7) The dictionary states that they were a tribe of the Kekayas (see page 258, note) and that Eka-cakrā was one of their towns, but Eka-cakrā seems rather to have been in Madhya-deśa (Adi-P, clvii 6104-9, clx 6207, cixiv 6306, and Vanu-P, xi 388-415), and Arrah in Bihar claims to be that town Perhaps there may be some confusion with Kīkata, the old name of Bihar in this

7 Kāśmīrakam rāṣṭram, it is called Kāśmīraka-mandala (M Bh, Vana-P cxxx 10545-6, and Anuśās-P xxv 1695), see page 261, note It is quite out of place here

8 This was a country in the north of the Panjab and its capital was Abhiśārī (M Bh, Sabhā-P xxvi 1027, and Bhīṣma-P, ix 361) It is not often mentioned (Karna-P, xiv 510-1, and see also perhaps Drona P xciii 3379-80), unless the Abhisāhas or Abhiśāhas are the same people (Bhīṣma-P, xviii 688, cxviii 5485, Drona-P clxi 7207) But Abhisāra is quite out of place here in the north-eastern region

9 This is not in the dictionary I have met with it elsewhere only in Hari-Vamsa, cxix 5503-4, but there it is a mistake for Darada, compare xcii 5022-3, and xcii 4966-70 The Daradas are out of place here, see page 258, note, They are mentioned in verse 32 also

10 No doubt a mistake for Tanganas, see page 261, note

11 This is not in the dictionary, but a people called Kulatī are mentioned there I have not found it elsewhere The word resembles Kulūta (Karna-P, xii 475 and 485) and Kolūta and Kolūka (Rāmāy, Kīṣk-K, xliii 8, and Annotations) which seem to be the modern Kulu near the source of the R Bias, but it is out of place here, A similar name Kurūtas is mentioned in verse 51

12 This is mentioned in the dictionary, but I have not found it elsewhere Vana rāṣṭra as "the country of forests" would apply well to the densely wooded tracts of Aśsam

13 I have not met with this elsewhere and it is not in the dictionary A place called Sairīśaba is mentioned, but it was west of Delhi (M Bh, Sabhā-P, xxxi 1187-8)

14 This is mentioned in the dictionary, and Brahma-puta is said to be the name of a peak in the Himālayas, but I have not met either name elsewhere

15 This is in the dictionary but I have not found it elsewhere,

16 See page 322, note, and chap 54, verse 8

17 These would be the people dwelling on the banks of the river Kauśikī or Kosi (see page 246, note)

18 This is not in the dictionary and I have not found it elsewhere The text should no doubt read Nandā separate from Kirāta-kausikā, and the people are the Nandas, those who live on the banks of the rivers Nandā and Aparānandā, which are often mentioned as situated in the North between the Ganges and Kauśikī or Kosi, and near the R Bāhudi and Mt Hemakūṭa (M Bh, Adi-P ccxv 7818-9, Vana-P, lxxxvii 8323, cx 9968-87, and Drona-P, liv 2092)

peoples; the Dārvādas,¹ and the Marakas,² and the Kurṁṭas,³ the Anna-dārakas,⁴ the Eka-pādas,⁵ the Khaśas,⁶ the Ghośas,⁷ the Svarga-bhaumānavadyakas,⁸ and the Hingas,⁹ and the Yavanas,¹⁰ and those who are called Cira-pitt-vatanas,¹¹ the Tri-netras,¹² and the Pauravas,¹³ and the Gandharvas,¹⁴ O brāhmaṇa.

1. This seems to be a mistake; it seems the reading should be either Dārvādyā, "the Dārvas and others," or Dārvā dāmarakāś. For the Darvas see chap. 54.
2. Or perhaps Dāmarakas as suggested in the last note. Maraka is given in the dictionary but I have not found it elsewhere. It suggests Muru and Naraka, the names of two Dānava or Asura chiefs, in Prāg-jyotiṣa whom Kṛṣṇa conquered (M.Bh, Sabhā-P., xiii 578; Vana-P., xii. 488 Udyoga-P., xlvii 1887-92 ; cxxix 4108-9, clvii 5353-8; Śānti-P., cccxii 12954-6 ; and Hari-V., cxxi 6791-cxxiii. 6921). Prāg-jyotiṣa was the North of Bengal, see chap. 54 note.
3. This is not in the dictionary and I have not found it elsewhere. Is it to be connected with the river Karutoyā, the modern Kuratec (see chap. 54).
4. This is not in the dictionary and I have not found it elsewhere.
5. The men with only one foot, (see page chap. 55.)
6. They are mentioned above in verse 6; (see page chap. 54. Note)
7. I have not met with these elsewhere. The Ghośa-sankhyas are mentioned in verse 6 above.
8. This seems to be a compound name, but it is not in the dictionary and I have not found anything like it elsewhere. As an adjective it might mean, "faultless as Svarga and the planet Mars" but it seems inappropriate.
9. I have not met with this elsewhere and it is not in the dictionary.
10. The Yavanas were in the North-west, see page 256, note, find also chap. 54, verse 8; but they seem to have spread widely and here they are mentioned in the North-east.
11. Those who wear bark clothing." I have not met with it elsewhere as the name of a people.
12. 'The three-eyed people.' It was believed there were such people, see M.Bh., Sabhā-P., 1.1837.
13. The Paurava race was descended from Pāru, one of Yayāti's sons (M.Bh., Ādi-P., lxxxv. 3533-4 ; and xcv. 3762-4) who is said to have got Madhya-deśa (Hari-V., xxx. 1604 and 1619); and the Pauravas spread in various directions. A Paurava kingdom is placed in the North region, in the account of Arjuna's conquests there (Sabhā-P., xxvi. 1022-5) and that may be the nation intended here. There were also Pauravas elsewhere (e.g., Śānti-P., xlix. 1790-2; and Ādi-P., clxxxvi. 6995; but Sabhā-P., xxx. 1164 is probably a mistake).
14. The Gandharvas were fabled to be heavenly musicians, but they are also spoken of as a people dwelling beyond lake Mānasa, and it is said Arjuna conquered them and brought back a tribute of fine roan horses (titiiri-Kalmāṣa) from their country (Sabhā-P., xxvii 1041-3). It is said the Gandharvas are more powerful by night (Adi-P, clxx

ग्रहैर्भवति पीडोत्थमल्पायासमशोभनम्॥५८॥

Singly all countries are alike; fear or prosperity¹ comes to people according as either arises out of the particular constellation and planet, O brāhmana. The thought, that mankind are in a common predicament with their own particular constellations when these are unfavourable, inspires fear. Along with the particular planets there arises from their occupations an unfavourable influence which discourages exertion.

Likewise the development of the conditions may be favourable; and so when the planets are badly situated it tends to produce slight benefit to men and to themselves with the wise who are learned in geography,² When the particular planet is badly situated,³ men even of sacred merit have fear for their goods or cattle-pen, their dependents, friends or children or wife.

Now men of little merit feel fear in their souls, very sinful men feel it everywhere indeed, but the sinless never in a single place. Man experiences good or evil, which may arise from community of region, place and people, or which may arise from having a common king, or which may arise peculiarly from himself,⁴ or which may arise from community of constellation and planet. And mutual preservation is produced by- the non-malignity⁵ of the planets; and loss of good is

I have described to you what is the position of the Tortoise among the constellations. But this community of countries is inauspicious and also auspicious. Therefore a wise man, knowing the constellation of his particular country and the occultation of the planets, should perform a propitiatory rite for himself and observe the popular rumours, O best of men.

आकाशदेवतानां च दैत्यादीनां च दौर्हृदाः।

पृथ्व्यां पतन्ति ते लोके लोकवादा इति श्रुताः॥६६॥

तां तथैव बुधः कुर्याल्लोकवादान्न हापयेत्।

तेषां तत्करणात्राणां युक्तो दुष्टागमक्षयः॥६७॥

So a wise man should perform that propitiatory rite; he should not discard the popular rumours. By reason of them the decay of corrupt traditional doctrine⁸ befits men.

Those rumours may effect the rise of good and the casting off of sins, also the forsaking of wisdom,⁹ O brāhmana; they cause the loss of goods and other properly. Therefore a wise man, being devoted to propitiatory rites and taking an interest in the popular rumours, should have the popular rumours proclaimed and the propitiatory rites performed at the occupations of planets ; and he should practise fastings devoid of malice, the praiseworthy-laudation of funeral monuments and other objects of veneration, prayer, the homa oblation, and liberality and ablution ; he should eschew anger and other passions.

And a learned man should be devoid of malice and shew benevolence towards all created things; he should discard evil speech and also outrageous words. And a man should perform the worship of the planets at all occupations. Thus all terrible things which result from the planets and constellations are without exception pacified with regard to self-subdued men.

Mārkaṇḍeya tells of the continents Bhadrāśva and Ketumāla, and the country of the Northern Kurus, and describes their mountains, rivers and people.

Thus then have I declared this continent Bhārata accurately, O muni, and the Kṛta, Tretā, and Dvāpara, and Kali ages which are the four ages. And now indeed there is a fourfold classification¹ in these ages, O brāhmaṇa. Four, three and two hundreds and one hundred of autumns men live here in the Kṛta, Tretā and two other ages respectively, O brāhmaṇa.

Hear from me of the continent Bhadrāśva, which is situated east of the magnificent eastern mountain Deva-kūṭa. Both Śveta-parṇa, and Nila, and the lofty mountain Śaivala, Kauranja, Parna-salagraṭhese indeed are the five mountain ranges. There are many small mountains besides, which are offshoots of those ranges; the countries there are distinguished by them, they are of various shapes and occur in thousands. Moreover they are like white water-lilies and are auspicious with their pure summits. Such-like and diverse also are other hills by hundreds and thousands.

The Sitā, the Saṅkhāvatī, the Bhadrā, and the Cakravartā and many other rivers spread abroad there, bearing down volumes of cold water. In this country mankind are lustrous as shells and like pure gold;² they associate with the celestials; they are holy; their lives last a thousand years; neither inferior nor superior exists among them; they are all of equal appearance ; they are endowed naturally with patience and the seven other good qualities.

There are other hills by thousands, among which a multitude of people dwell. Those people dwell there in hundreds, the Maulis¹ huge in stature, the Śākas, Potas and Karambhakas,² and those who are distinguished by their thumbs,³ who drink of the great rivers, the Vankṣu, the Śyāmā, the Svakambalā, the Amoghā, the Kāminī, the Śyāmā, and of others in thousands. And here life is equal to the above-mentioned lives in Bhadrāśva.

succession; and they produce garments and ornaments inside their fruits; verily they bestow all one's desire; they yield fruit according to all one's desire. The ground abounds with precious stones; the air is fragrant and always delightful. Mankind are born there, when they quit the world of the gods. They are born in pairs; the paws abide an equal time, and are as fond of each other as cakravākas.

And in the midst thereof the great river Bhadra-soma flows through the earth with a volume of Sacred and pure water.

And there are other rivers by thousands in that northern continent; and some flow with milk and others flow with ghee. And there are lakes of curdled milk there, and others lie among the various hills. And fruits of various kinds, which taste rather like amṛta, are produced by hundreds and thousands in the woods in those continents. And there the adorable Viṣṇu has his head turned to the east and wears a fish's shape. And the lunar constellations are divided⁴ into nine parts, three and three, and the regions of the sky are divided into nine parts, O best of munis.

I will tell you, O brāhmaṇa, what the continent Kim-puruṣa is; where men with real bodies live ten thousand years; where men and women are indeed free from sickness and free from sorrow, and there the fig-tree¹ is called ṣaṇḍa; it grows very high, it is like a grove.² Those men are always drinking the juice of its fruit; and the women are born with lasting youthfulness and are fragrant as the lotus.³

I have mentioned Ilāvṛta, which is in the middle, the continent of Meru. The sun does not burn there, nor do men suffer from decay; and they do not grasp at selfish gains.⁴ The rays of the moon and the sun, of the constellations and planets there are the sublime lustre of Meru. Mankind are born there bright as the lotus flower, fragrant as the lotus flower; they feed on the juice of the jambu fruit; and their eyes are as wide as the lotus leaf. And their life there lasts for thirteen thousand years.

There is a saucer shaped expanse in the middle of Meru¹ in Ilāvṛta; therein is the great mountain. Meru; thus is made known Ilāvṛta. Next I will tell of the continent Rāmyaka; hearken thereto. And there the green-leaved Indian fig-tree² is the lofty tree. And the people there pass their time drinking the juice of its fruit.

And north of that is the continent famed by name as Hiraṇ-maya; where the river Hiraṇ-vati gleams with abundant lotuses. Mankind there are born with great strength, full of vigour, with large bodies, eminently good, wealthy and benign of look.

The Story of the Brahman in the Svārociṣa Manvantara.

Mārkaṇḍeya begins the relation of the Svārociṣa Manvantara— A young brāhmaṇa, by virtue of a magic ointment applied to his feet, visits the Himalaya mountains in half a day—The scenery there described—He wishes to return home, but the magic ointment has been dissolved by the snow, and he loses his way— The Apsaras

Varūthini meets him, and Jailing in love with him begs him for his love—He refuses all her entreaties, and at length appeals to the gārhapatya fire to help him homeward.

You have duly related what you were asked, O great muni, namely, the constitution of the earth, ocean, etc., their dimensions, also the planets and their dimensions, and the constitution of the constellations, and the bhur-loka and the other worlds, and all the Lower Regions. And you have declared the Svāyambhuva Manvantara to me, O muni. Next I wish to hear about the Manvantaras which succeeded that, the deities who ruled over the Manvantaras, the ṛṣis, and the kings who were their sons.

I have made known to you the Manvantara which is called Svāyambhuva. Now next to that hear about another which is named after Svārociṣa.³ There lived a certain brāhmaṇa eminent among the dvijas in the town Aruṇāspada on the bank of the Varuṇā; and he surpassed the Aśvins¹ in beauty of form. He was gentle in disposition, upright in conduct, he had studied all the Vedas and Vedāṅgas; always gracious to guests, he was the refuge of all persons who arrived at night. Now he had this intention, "I will see the earth which has most charming forests and gardens, and is embellished with many a town."

Now a certain guest once arrived at his abode, who was acquainted with the powers of various medicinal herbs, and skilled in the magic art. Now being requested by the former, whose mind was purified by faith, he described to him both countries and charming towns, forests, rivers,² and mountains, and holy sanctuaries. Then the former filled with astonishment said to that best of brāhmaṇas, "In that you have seen many countries you are not worn with excessive toil, you are not very old in life, nor had you long passed your youth. How do you roam the earth in a short time, O brāhmaṇa?"

And that brāhmaṇa of exalted intellect gave him an ointment for the feet; and offered careful counsel⁴ regarding the region which the other mentioned.

Then he roamed about there over the surface of the snowy mountain. Now the ointment on his feet, which was extracted from the choicest medicinal herbs, became washed off by the melting snow which accumulated on his feet. Thereupon he grew slack in his walk, as he wandered about hither and thither. He saw the peaks of the snowy range which most fascinate the mind. Crazy at those peaks which are loved of the Siddhas and Gandharvas, and where the Kin-naras disport themselves, which are delightful here and there for play and pastime among the gods and other heavenly beings, and which were thronged with hundreds of bevy of heavenly Apsarases, the brāhmaṇa, whose hair stood erect with delight, was not satiated, O muni.

Filled with rapture he gazed at the mighty mountain range Himavat, which in one place captivated him with the fall of the broken water from a torrent, and which in another place was made resonant with the cries of peacocks as they danced, and which was thronged here and there with pied-created cuckoos,¹ lapwings and other pretty birds, and with cock-kovils and humming bees, which captivated the ear, and which was fanned by breezes perfumed with scents from trees that were in full blossom.

And after viewing the mighty mountain. Himavat as it thus was, the young brāhmaṇa resolved to go homewards, intending to see it again the next day. Now he had lost the ointment from his feet, his step was slow by reason of his long walking, he pondered "What is this?" I have acted unwisely, if the ointment is destroyed, having dissolved off me by the melted snow; and this mountain is very difficult of access, and it is a long distance that I have come here. I shall suffer loss in my rites.

How shall I kindle a fire and do my dutiful homage and all else that is needful? I have fallen into a terrible strait. "This is charming! that is charming!"— with my sight so engrossed on this fine mountain, I shall not be satiated even in hundreds of years. The melodious talk of the Kinnavas ravishes my ears all around, and ray nose eagerly seeks the scents from the trees that are in fall blossom, and the breeze is delightful to the touch, and the fruits are full of juice, and the charming lakes forcibly captivate the mind. All actions and the perpetual and occasional ceremonies are accomplished by a brāhmaṇa when he stays at home; so they are lost if he dwells away from home. While you remain here, never will old age light on you. This is the land of the thirty gods; it gives fullness to youth! Having spoken thus, the lotus-eyed maiden, full of affection, exclaiming sweetly "Be you gracious!" suddenly embraced him in the eagerness of her mind.

About the Svārociṣa Manvantara.

The young brāhmaṇa is succoured by Agni and returns homs—A Gandharva Kali sees Varūthinī disconsolate and in the guise of the brāhmaṇa gains her love.

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke :

Now as the young brāhmaṇa thus spoke, the Gārhapatya Fire in sooth appeared at hand upon his body; and with it surmounting him, he stood amid a circle of light, and illumined that place as if he were Agni in bodily form. Now vehement love seized upon the heavenly maiden as she beheld the brāhmaṇa, who stood there in so glorious a form.

Then the young brāhmaṇa,¹ surmounted by that Fire, immediately started to go as before; and he departed in haste while the slender-shaped heavenly maiden gazed after him as far as her eye could reach, her throat quivering with sighs. Then in one moment from that time the brāhmaṇa reached his own abode and performed all the rites as he had mentioned.

Now she, the beautiful in every limb, remained with soul and mind clinging fast to him, and passed the remainder of the day and also the night in almost ceaseless sighing. And the faultlessly-shaped maiden sighing and crying "Ah! Ah!" continually, reproached herself, "O luckless one that I am!" though her eyes were fascinating.

Neither in sport, nor in food, nor yet on delightful forest, nor on the charming glens did she then fix her joy. She turned her desire towards a pair of billing cakravākas. Forsaken by him the finely-shaped maiden reproached her own youthful womanhood, "How happened it¹ that I came to this mountain, forcibly attracted by evil fate? And how happened it that he, such a man as that, crossed the range of my eye? If that grand man shall not come to me to-day, verily the intolerable fire of my love for him will consume me away. Now a Gandharva named Kali was enamoured of her, and had been rejected by her before. He beheld her in that condition. Then he pondered, "Why now is this Varūthinī, who moves as gracefully as an elephant, faded by the hot blast of sighing on this mountain? Has she been wounded by some muni's curse, or has any one treated her with dishonour, since she keeps on bedewing her face copiously with tears?"

Vibhā-varī daughter of the Vidyā-dhara Mandāra was my friend, and Kalā-vatī, the muni Pāra's daughter, was my other friend. With them I went to Kailāsa's lofty¹ slope. There I saw a certain muni; exceedingly thin was his face through his austerities, wasted was his neck through hunger, vigourless was he, deep sunk were the pupils of his eyes. I laughed at him, and then he grew enraged and cursed me, in a very infirm voice and with his shoot-like lower lip somewhat quivering²—“Since you have laughed at me, O ignoble and bad ascetic maiden, a Rākṣasa shall therefore overcome you in no long time indeed.”

forbearance is verily brāhmaṇa-hood; the controlling of wrath is the performance of austerities.” Hearing this the sage of measureless glory cursed both of them also,—“Leprosy in the limbs shall light on one of you, and consumption on the other.” Exactly as he said, it befell them both immediately.

Now out of all the multitude of weapons I give you the weapon which strikes to the heart; save me from this Rākṣasa, O high-minded youth! Rudra, who wields the bow Pināka, himself gave it to Svāyambhuva originally; Svāyambhuva gave it to Citrāyudha, may other's father; he again, as father-in-law, himself gave it to my father as a wedding gift. I, though a maiden, learnt, O hero! from my father how to use this Heart of all weapons, which destroys every foe. Vanquished thereby¹ the night-stalking demon then quitted her and said—“Be gracious! let the weapon be kept in peace, and hearken! I have been delivered by you, O most glorious hero! from a very grievous curse, which was inflicted by wise and exceedingly fierce Brahma-mitra. It is a benefit (none other greater can I receive from you, O illustrious hero!), whereby I have been delivered from a great and most sore curse.”

The brāhmaṇa Brahma-mitra had mastered the thirteen sections of the Atharva Veda, and had just studied the Ayurveda which is divided into eight parts. And I was well-known by the name Indivara; I was the father of this maiden. I was the son of the swordsman Nala-nābha king of the Vidyā-dharas. And at first I besought the muni Brahma-mitra, “Deign, adorable Sir!² to communicate to me the whole of the Ayurveda.” But though entreated often by me who remained bent with respect, he did not bestow on me the science of the Ayur-veda, O hero; then indeed I gained the science of the Ayur-veda, as he was

Now when the science was gained after a space of eight months, I gave way to excessive and repeated fits of laughter out of my great delight. Recognizing me by the laughter, the muni, enraged and with quivering neck spoke thus to me in harsh words—"Since you in invisible form, like a Rākᅇasa,³ has snatched the science from me, O evil-minded one, and despising me has indulged in laughter; therefore you shall be assuredly cast out as a terrible Rākᅇasa by my curse, O wicked one, after seven nights." On his uttering this, I propitiated him by prostrating myself before him and by other acts of deference; the brāhᅇmaᅇa with his mind immediately softened, said to me again—"What I have uttered will assuredly come to pass, O Gandharva; it can not happen otherwise; but after becoming a Rākᅇasa, you shall regain your own form, when with memory dead and in anger you shall wish to devour your own child.

Since such I am and since I have been delivered by you, O illustrious hero, from this most fearful demon-condition, therefore perform my request. Since then being nourished daily by the moon's increasing phases, which cause wane to wax again,¹ I have grown up, O best of men. Hence Kalā-vatī² is the name which my high-souled father gave me when he took me. My high-souled father, when solicited by a Gandharva, did not give me who am beautiful of face³ in marriage to him then, hence he was cursed⁴ by Āli⁵ the foe of the gods and perished.⁶ I was about to destroy myself then from excessive despair. Śambhu's wife Satī who is true to her promises prevented me, by saying, 'Grieve not, beautiful-browed maiden; you shall have an illustrious husband by name Sva-rocis, and your son by him shall be a Manu. And all the Nidhis⁷ shall submissively obey your command, and shall give you wealth according to your desire, O beautiful one! Take, my child, the knowledge by the power of which you shall succeed; this knowledge is called Padminī, it is greatly worshipped by Mahā-padma.' Then he, lustrous as the immortals, accompanied by his wives, lived in pleasure on that high mountain where were charming woods and cascades. The Nidhis,¹ being subject through the knowledge Padminī, brought gems for every kind of joyment, sweets and melodies, garlands, raiment, ornaments, richly scented unguent, most brilliant golden seats according to his desire, golden things (illustrious Sir!), pots and vessels, Young men are worthy of praise, their wives are not of exceeding beauty; few are the wives and husbands of exceeding beauty in the world! A man dearly longs for the women he loves; a woman desires to obtain a lover; most rare is it to find a wedded pair rich in mutual affection. Happy is this man whom his darlings long for; these women are indeed very dear to him; verily, it is among the happy that mutual affection exists!”

Hearing this speech uttered by the grey lag-goose, the hen-cakra-vāka scarcely surprised in mind spoke to her—"This man is not happy, because modesty springs not from proximity with other women; he is enjoying one or other of the women, his mind does not dwell on all of them.
 Since the heart's affection has only one basis, my friend, how then will this man be affectionate to several wives? These women are not beloved by their husband, nor is this husband beloved by them; these women are only just an amusement as does he not quit his life? He embraces some loved woman, the while he is in the thoughts of some other loving woman. He is bartered at the price of the bestowal of knowledge, as if he were a verily exists not equally towards many women.

About the Svārociṣa Manvantara.

Sva-rocis had three sons whom he settled in separate kingdoms, Vijaya in a city Vijaya in Kāma-rūpa, Meru-nanda in Nanda-vaṭī in the North, and Prabhāva in Tāla in the South.— One day he met the goddess of a forest, and had by her a son Dyuti-mat Svārociṣa, who became a Manu. Sva-rocis, being again admonished by a conversation between two ducks, gives himself up to a religious life and dies.

as he was for his animal behaviour¹. Yet on again meeting with them, his love increased. Casting aside those disparaging speeches he sported for six hundred years. But while performing the works of righteousness without hindrance to righteousness, wise Sva-rocis continues to enjoy the pleasures of sense with those wives.

And then three sons were born to Sva-rocis, Vijaya, and Meru-nanda, and mighty Prabhāva; and Indivara's daughter Mano-ramā gave birth to Vijaya, Vibhā-vaṭī to Meru-nanda, and Kalā-vaṭī to Prabhāva. And by the power of the knowledge named Padminī,² which accomplishes all pleasures, he their father built three cities for them. Now he gave a noble city named Vijaya on a hill in Kāma-rūpa³ in the Eastern region to his son Vijaya at first; and he made Meru-nanda's city the famous one in the north, called Nanda-vaṭī,⁴ which is begirt with lofty ramparts and walls; and he made Kalā-vatī's son Prabhāva to dwell in the famous city Tāla¹ which is situated in the Southern region. Having thus settled his sons in their cities, he, the manly hero, sported with those his wives in charming highlands.

Beholding his splendour his father himself bestowed on him the name Dyuti-mat, since the regions of the sky were illuminated by his splendour. The boy named Dyuti-mat possessed great strength and valour; since he was son of Sva-rocis, he became known as Svārociṣa.

Sva-rocis also once, while roaming by a charming mountain cascade, saw a duck attended by his mate. He said then to his mate, who was full of continuous longings,— "Restrain yourself, I have played with you full long. What do you need with pleasures at all times? Moreover people of discrimination, being eager for pleasures experienced and not yet experienced, both give alms and perform the full round of righteous acts. Why then do you not wish for pleasures? Pleasure is the reward of effort among men who have discrimination and among brute animals, how much more among those who have subdued their souls?

Mārkaṇḍeya tells of the knowledge called Padminī, of the eight Nidhis connected with it, and of the influences which they exercise over men.

Adorable Sir! you have related it all fully to me, both Sva-roci's deeds and Svārociṣa's birth. Now tell me at length about the knowledge named Padminī which compasses all pleasures, and about the Nidhis who are allied thereto, and about the nature of the eight Nidhis who exist, and the composition of their wealth. I desire to hear it expounded by you thoroughly, O guru!

supporters. Listen while I tell you of it. The Nidhis therein are Padma and Mahā-padma, and Makara, and Kacchapa, Mukunda and Nandaka, Nīla, and Śankha is the eight Nidhi. These live in real good-fortune;² verily perfection springs from them. These eight Nidhis indeed have been proclaimed to you, O Krauṣṭuki³. By means of the gods' favour and by attendance on good men a man's wealth is always watched over by them, O muni. Listen while I tell you that their nature is like.

First, the Nidhi named Padma belongs, O brāhmaṇa, to Maya,⁴ to his son, and to the sons and grandsons of his son perpetually. And a man dominated thereby may become the perfection of politeness, since this Nidhi is supported by goodness, yields great enjoyment and is sincere. And he amasses immense quantities of gold, silver, copper and other metals, and buys and sells them; he also makes sacrifices, and bestows the sacred fee; and he causes a palace to be built and temples for the gods, applying his mind thereto.

And another Nidhi who is supported by goodness is known as Mahā-padma. He has goodness for his chief quality. And a man dominated thereby amasses rubies and other gems, pearls and coral, and buys and sells them; and he gives to those whose disposition is towards religious devotion, and has dwellings constructed for them; and he himself develops into that disposition. And from him are born others of similar disposition in the descent of sons and grandsons. This Nidhi comes only from prior good-fortune,¹ and does not depart for seven generations.

The Nidhi who is composed of darkness² is named Makara. And a man on whom he looks³ is indeed born characterized chiefly by ignorance, though good in disposition. He gathers together arrows, swords, spears and bows, and shields and rope, and attains to friendship with kings; and he gives to kings who occupy themselves with heroic deeds, and to those whom they esteem; and he finds pleasure in buying and selling weapons and in nothing else. This Nidhi belongs to a man singly, and does not descend to his progeny. Such a man may meet⁴ death for the sake of wealth at the hands of robbers and also in battle.

4. For savraja read sa vrajet?

And the man on whom the Nidhi, who is called Kacchapa, casts his eye is dominated by ignorance, because that Nidhi is characterized by darkness; and he performs all the rules of life⁵ along with men who have acquired merit, and makes of those rules consist in mere acts; he confides in no one.

And another Nidhi, who is named Mukunda, is composed of the quality of passion.⁷ The man on whom he looks becomes of the same quality, O brāhmaṇa. He gathers together lutes, flutes and drums, and any musical instrument of percussion; he bestows wealth on singers and dancers, and on minstrels, bards, sycophants and those who are skilled in drama; he bestows pleasures on them day and night, and enjoys life alongwith those companions, O brāhmaṇa; and he finds no delight in women of loose character, nor with other folk of that kind. He forms a single union, the man to whom this Nidhi resorts.

And composed of passion and darkness is another great Nidhi called Nanda. The man on whom he looks attains to eminent firmness.¹ He gathers together all kinds of minerals and precious stones and trade-wares,² grain and other articles, and also buys and sells the same; he is the support of his own family and of each visitor and guest; he does not brook disrespectful language although it be very slight, O great muni! and when praised he entertains strong affection and proffers it; and whatever object of desire he wants, he has recourse to tenderness to obtain it.

He has many wives, who are prolific and very beautiful to his delight. And the Nidhi Nanda passes down to seven generations, and when strongly developed passes on to the next descendant with an eighth portion, O best of men! and he bestows length of life on all men. Nanda verily provides support to kinsmen indeed, and to those guests who have arrived from afar; and he is not held in honour in the next world; affection does not belong to him, but is born among those who dwell together; he causes laxity among those who were former friends, and affection with others.

Moreover the great Nidhi who contains goodness and passion is termed Nīla.³ A man united with him may become of that disposition. He leads a man to collect clothing, cotton cloth, grain and other fruit and flowers, also pearls, coral, and shells, and small shells and other similar things, timber and other materials and whatever else is produced in water, O muni; he leads him to buy and sell other things. In nothing else does his mind delight; and he constructs ponds and tanks and places for pleasure; and such a man makes embankments across rivers and plants trees; and after enjoying unguents, flowers and other objects of delight he is born again. And this Nidhi named Nīla persists for three generations.

And composed of passion and darkness is another Nidhi who is named Śaṅkha. And the man who is lord of this Nidhi is led by him to possess the same qualities. O brāhmaṇa, He exists in a man singly, and does not pass on to another generation. Listen, O Krauṣṭuki, to the character of a man who possesses the Nidhi Śaṅkha. It is wher quite alone that he enjoys food and clothing such as he himself has made; his family eat wretched food and wear no bright clothing; he makes no gift to friend, wife, brother, son, daughter-in-law and other relatives. Always intent on his own nourishment is the man who possesses Śaṅkha.

Thus these Nidhis have been described, the deities of wealth among men. When their looks are blended, the blended Nidhis produce results according to their natures, just as each nature described above springs indeed from the aspects of a particular Nidhi. And in sovereignty over them all sits Lakṣmi, who is this knowledge called Padminī of the dvijas.

About the Auttāna¹ Manv-antara.

King Uttama banished his queen to a forest because of her persistent unloving behaviour.—A brāhmaṇa whose wife had been carried off invokes the king's help to recover her.—The king in searching for her reaches a muni's hermitage, and is censured by the muni for his conduct to the queen.

Krauṣṭuki spoke

O brāhmaṇa, you have described to me the Svārociṣa manv-antara at length and also the eight Nidhis, whom I asked about. You did tell me of the Svāyambhuva manvantara before that. Tell me of the third manvantara which is named aft.: Uttama.²

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke :

There was a son of Uttāna-pāda named Uttama, son of Suruci,³ famous, great in strength and

1. This should be Auttoma; see chap. 50, verse 7, and 69, verse 39. It seems to be a mistake caused by the fact that Uttama was son of Uttāna-pāda, see verse 3. It occurs in the next canto, but is corrected in chap. 68.

2. Auttama would be preferable, as he was the Manu, see chap. 69, verse 39; read then kathayauttama-sañjñitam for kathayottama-sañjñitam?

3. Or Su-ruci, a feminine name.

valour, and righteous of soul, and magnanimous, a monarch rich in valour. Excelling all created beings he shone in valour like the sun. He was the same both to foe and friend, to his city and to his son, being one who understood righteousness; and he was like Yama to the wicked, and like Soma to the good, O great muni!

A knower of righteousness, Uttāna-pāda's son Uttama married a maiden of Babhru's race named Bahulā, as supreme Indra married famous Śāci. His mind was always exceedingly affectionate to her, O noble brāhmaṇa,¹ just as is the moon's mind which has fixed its abode in Rohinī. Verily his mind felt on attachment to any other object; in sleep also that king's mind rested on her. And the king at the very sight of her, who was most beautiful in every limb, was continually touching her body, and at the touch of her body he became one with her.² The king's words, although kindly, caused annoyance to her ears, and she deemed his special respect as humiliation from him.

She contemned a garland when given by him, and his beautiful ornaments; and she arose as if pained in body when he drank the choice nectar of her lips; and only a moment did the king hold her by the hand when he enjoyed her. She ate very little food, O brāhmaṇa, and that with no great delight. Thus she was not favourable to the magnanimous king who was favourable to her; yet more abundant and excessive love did the king show.

Now once the king, when engaged in drinking, respectfully caused that wilful queen to hold a drinking cup which had been cleansed with wine, he being then surrounded with accomplished attendants³ who were melodious in their singing, and who were assiduously singing and chanting while king looked on; but she does not wish to take that cup, turning her face away from it, in the sight of the king. Thereat the king was enraged. Breathing hard like a serpent, when set at nought by his dear queen, as if a husband not dear to her, he called the door-keeper and said,—“O door-keeper! Take this lady of evil heart to a desolate forest and abandon her forthwith! Deliberate you not on this my command!”

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke :

Thereupon the door-keeper deeming the king's word was not to be questioned, mounted the beautiful-browed lady in a chariot and left her in a forest. And she, when abandoned thus by the king in the forest and being away from his sight, held he had done her the greatest favour. And king Auttāna-pādi, with soul and mind burning with the anguish of love for her, took no other wife. He remembered her who was beautiful in every limb, day and night bereft of ease, and ruled his kingdom, governing his people righteously. While he ruled his people, as a father his own children, a certain brāhmaṇa suffering in mind arrived and spoke thus—

ब्राह्मण उवाच

The brāhmaṇa spoke

O Mahā-rāja! in grievous suffering am I; hearken while I speak. Men's deliverance from pain comes from no where but the king! Some one carried off my wife by night while I slept, without unlocking the house door. Deign to bring her back to me.

राजोवाच

न वेत्सि केनापहृता क्व वा नीता तु सा द्विज।
 यतामि विग्रहे कस्य कुतो वाप्यानयामि ताम्॥ २६॥

The king spoke

Know you not, O brāhmaṇa, who carried her off or where has she been taken? With whom shall I strive in fight? or whence shall I bring her back?

ब्राह्मण उवाच

तथैव स्थगिते द्वारि प्रसुप्तस्य गृहे मम।

The brāhmaṇa spoke

While I slept just as I was, with the door fastened, O king, why and by whom my wife was carried off—this you, Sir, know. You are our guardian, O king, whose due is the levy of a sixth part of our wealth.¹ Therefore men sleep at night, freed from anxiety about justice.

राजोवाच

न ते दृष्टा मया भार्या यादग्रूपा च देहतः।

The king spoke

I have not seen your wife. Tell me what is she like in body, and what is her age; and of what disposition is the brāhmaṇa lady?

ब्राह्मण उवाच

The brāhmaṇa spoke

Sharp-eyed is she, very tall, short-armed, thin-faced, ungainly in form, O king. I defame her not by this description; very harsh in speech, and ungentle is she in disposition, O king—thus I have described my wife; she is a do-nothing, unpleasant in look, and she has slightly passed early womanhood, O king. Such is my wife in form; true is this I have spoken.

The king spoke

Enough have you had of her, O brāhmaṇa. I will give you another wife. An excellent wife tends to one's happiness, such a one as that is verily a source of pain. Bodily beauty consists in healthfulness,¹ O brāhmaṇa, its cause is a noble disposition. She who has neither beauty nor good disposition should be abandoned for that very reason.

The brāhmaṇa spoke

"A wife must be guarded," O king—such is our highest divine teaching. When a wife is guarded, the offspring is guarded. For the Soul² is born in her, hence she must be guarded, O king. When the offspring is guarded, the Soul is guarded.

And I may have loss of righteousness from day to-day, while I remain wifeless; and that, through the destruction of the perpetual ceremonies, will tend to my downfall. And in her will be my offspring, O king. She will give you the sixth part; she will be a cause of righteousness.

For that reason I have declared this to you. Bring back my wife who has been carried off, my lord, since your honour is placed supreme for our protection.

मार्कण्डेय उवाच

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke :

The king, on hearing him so speak, took thought, and mounted his great chariot which was furnished with every useful requisite.

Hither and thither he wandered over the earth with that brāhmaṇa, and saw a fine hermitage of ascetics in a large forest; and alighting there he entered and saw a muni, seated on a silken cushion, and blazing as it were with splendour. Seeing the king arrived, he rose in haste, and

The ṛṣi spoke

Had you forgotten, both that you did abandon your wife in the forest, and that alongwith her you did abandon all your righteousness, O king. Through neglect of religious acts a man becomes unfit to be touched by his adherents, like one on whom ordure and urine have been showered;¹ you have neglected an act of permanent observance. Just as a complaisant wife must bear with her husband though he be of bad disposition, so a wife although of bad disposition must be cherished by her husband, O king. Ungracious indeed was that brāhmaṇa's wife who was carried off; nevertheless he, being a lover of righteousness, very much excels² you, O king. You establish other men in their proper ways of righteousness when your swerve therefrom, O king. What other person will establish you when you swerve from your righteousness?

About the *Auttāna*³ Manvantara

King Uttama finds the brāhmaṇa's wife in the forest and is courteously received by the Rākṣasa, who says he carried her off in order to impair the brāhmaṇa's religious merit. At the king's request the Rākṣasa consumes her evil disposition and restores her to her husband.

2. Śrī-phala, the fruit of the bilva or vilva tree, Aegle marmelos, and also the tree itself. It is a pretty large tree, a native of the mountainous parts of the East coast, and also found in the low lands; its fruit is considered "nutritious, warm, cathartic; in taste delicious; in fragrance exquisite"—Roxburgh's Flora Indica, vol II. 579-80. See page 25 note; but I have made an error there in assigning the name bel-phul to this tree. Bel-phul is the name of the double Arabian jasmine, Jasminum Zambac, Roxb. (I. 88) or J. Sambac, Oliver. This jasmine is a shrub with delightfully fragrant white flowers, and is in common cultivation. Its Sanskrit name is mallikā, and also saptalā; and bel-phul is the common modern name both for the flower and for the plant itself. It has numerous other vernacular names, and Roxburgh says bela is one of them, but this seems doubtful.

About the Auttama Manv-antara.

King Uttama visits the ṛṣi, learns his queen has been taken to Pātāla by a Nāga king, who then curses his daughter for hiding the queen from him—and he is also told his unhappy married life was caused by adverse planetary influence.

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke :

Now the king, after despatching the woman to her husband’s house, sighed and thought, “What good deed may there be in this? The high-minded muni declared I was wretched because of my unfitness for the arghya offering; and this night-roaming demon spoke of ‘impaired condition’ with reference to the brāhmaṇa. Being such, what shall I do, for I abandoned her, my wife? Or shall

Thus pondered the king, and mounting the chariot went where dwelt the great muni, righteous in soul, who knew the three periods of time. And descending from the chariot he approached and prostrated himself before that muni, and related how happened his meeting with the Rākṣasa, and his interview with the brāhmaṇa woman, and the removal of her evil disposition,² and her despatch to her husband’s house, and what was his business in coming back.

Ask me here “what must I do?” with anxious mind; and since you are come, O king, hear what you must do. CHAPTER 70

End of the Auttama Manv-antara.

Mārkaṇḍeya names the gods of the Auttama Manv-antara and their lord, and mentions the kings and ṛṣis.

मार्कण्डेय उवाच

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke :

Listen while I speak of the gods, the Indra, the ṛṣis, the kings in this third manv-antara of the Prajā-pati Auttama.

तृतीये तु गणे देवाः शिवाख्या मुनिसत्तम।
शिवाः स्वरूपतस्ते तु श्रुताः पापप्रणाशनाः॥३॥

Thus the first group of gods was the Svadhāmans,² who acted according to their name; and another also, the second group of the thirty gods, was the Satyākhyas.³ Now the gods in the third group were the Śivākhyas,⁴ O best of munis: now they were auspicious by nature; they are declared to have destroyed sin. And the fourth group of the gods therein was the Pratardanākhyas,⁵ O best of munis, in the period of Auttama Manu. And the gods in the fifth group therein were the Vaśa-vartins,⁶ O brāhmaṇa; now all of them indeed had natures corresponding to their names, O great muni.

And these five groups of gods are reported to have fed of the sacrifices. All the groups were twelve in the manv-antara which appertained to that best of Manus. Their lord⁷ was illustrious; may he become the spiritual preceptor in the three worlds! Having offered a hundred sacrifices, he was verily named Su-śānti.⁸ Now a song, which is embellished with the words composing his name in order to avert portents emanating from him, is sung by men on the earth even to this day,—“Sweetly serene is the kindly ruler of the gods, he bestows sweet serenity.” He is attended by the Śivas and Satyas⁹ and other groups of gods and also by the Vaśa-vartins.¹⁰ Without birth¹ was he, absolutely pure, supernatural.

Very powerful and valiant were that Manu's sons, renowned, like to the thirty gods. The descendants of his sons ruled over the earth as kings during the manv-antara of that Manu of supreme splendour. Of his four ages were reckoned in truth seventy-one and a half, of the ages called Kṛta, Tretā and so on, which I have declared in the account of the Age. By the innate splendour of the austerities of that most excellent high-souled Manu his seven sons became the seven ṛṣis in that period.

This third manv-antara I have declared to you. And the exploits of all those² Manus transcend the cognizance of the senses; and the birth of the high-souled Manu is to be known as such, and their majesty also.

About the Tāmāsa Manv-antara.

King Sva-rāṣṭra being driven from his kingdom by enemies became an ascetic, and met his deceased queen in the shape of a doe during a great flood.— He begot a son by her who became the Manu Tāmāsa.— The gods, ṛṣis and kings of that manv-antara are named.

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke :

There lived on the earth a famous king, by name Sva-rāṣṭra, valiant, an offerer of many sacrifices, wise, invincible in battles. The sun being invoked by his ministers gave him a very long life; and he had a hundred happy wives, O brāhmaṇa. The wives of that long-lived king were not very long-lived, O muni; and in time his servants, ministers and people came to their end. And he, being bereft³ of his wives and his servants who were his equals in age, was dejected in mind and dwindled in vigour day and night.

A neighbouring king named Vi-marda ousted him then from his kingdom, failing as he was in vigour, deprived of his devoted adherents, greatly afflicted. And being ousted¹ from his kingdom, he went to a forest, despairing in mind, and taking up his abode on a sandbank in the Viṭastā, illustrious as he was, he practised austerities. Undergoing the five fires in the hot season,² exposing himself naked to the showers³ in the rainy season, and lying in water in the cold season, he lived abstaining from food, strict in his devout rites.

Afterwards there occurred, while he practised his austerities, a great flood day after day in the rainy season, with the clouds pouring down rain incessantly. The east could not be distinguished, nor the south, nor the west, nor the north; everything looked as if besmeared with darkness, The king, forced then in the excessive flood to seek the river bank, could not reach it although seeking it, being carried away by the exceedingly furious current.

And he experienced an intense pleasure which arose from touching her, as he wandered continually in the darkness, with his mind drawn out in love to her. While a girl in my father's home I went with my companions to a wood to play, and saw a deer united with a doe. Then approaching close I struck the doe. Frightened by me she fled away, and then the deer enraged said to me, "Silly girl! why are you so insane? Fie on this your evil disposition, by which you have rendered this period of impregnation fruitless for me!" Frightened then at hearing him speaking language as of a human being, I said to him— "Who are you who have reached this animal condition?"

Then exceedingly agitated I fell prostrate before the highly-enraged muni, who had resumed his own form, and exclaimed "Be gracious" again and again; "a girl is unskilled in words, hence I spoke as I did; assuredly women who have no father choose a husband themselves; and since I have a father, how can I choose, O best of munis, or do wrong? at your feet I bow, be gracious my lord!" While thus I lay prostrate, exclaiming repeatedly, "Be gracious! be gracious," O high-minded king, that lordly muni spoke—"My uttered word never goes amiss.

The Satyas and next the Su-dhīs, the Su-rūpas, and the Haris, these were the classes of gods therein, seven and twenty in number, O muni. And Śikhi Indra, mighty, great in valour, distinguished by a hundred sacrifices, became the lord of those gods. Jyotir-dhāman, Pr̥thu, Kāvya, Caitra, Agni, and Valaka, and also Pivara, these seven, were the seven ᅇsis, O brāhmaᅇa. And Nara, Kᅅānti, and Sānta, Dānta, Jānu, Jaᅇgha and others were Tāmasa's sons, very mighty kings.

Raivata's Manv-antara.

The ᅇᅇi Rta-vāc had a son who was bad because born under the constellation Revatī, and the ᅇᅇi made the constellation fall with his curse.—A daughter was born therefrom whom the ᅇᅇi Pramuca adopted and named Revatī.—King Durgama visited Pramuca and married Revatī, and the constellation was restored to its place at the marriage.—They had a son, the Manu Raivata.—The gods, ᅇsis and kings in his period are named.

There was an illustrious and famous ṛṣi named Rta-vāc. To that high-souled ṛṣi who had no son a son was born at the termination of the constellation Revatī. He performed the birth ceremony and all other rites for that son according to the ordinances, and also the investiture with the sacred thread and other ceremonies. And he was of bad disposition, O muni. And even from his son's very birth the ṛṣi, that lordly muni, became afflicted with a lingering disease; his mother suffered extreme pain, being attacked with leprosy and other diseases. And his father in his affliction pondered—"Why is this?" And that his son also, being exceedingly wicked in mind, took another muni's son's wife whom he met.

Then dejected in mind Rta-vāc spoke thus—"Better is it for men to have no son than a bad son! A bad son is always causing trouble to his father's and mother's heart; and casts downwards his ancestors who dwell in Svarga. He benefits not his friends, he satisfies not his ancestors, he causes suffering to his parents—fie on the birth of that son who commits evil deeds! Happy are they whose sons are commended by all the world, who benefit others, who are peaceful, who are devoted to good work! Uneasy and dull, averse to the next world, tending towards hell and not towards beatitude is our life which depends on our son. A bad son brings misery on his friends and joy to his adversaries, and he assuredly brings untimely old age on his parents."

And illustrious Pramuca nourished her, who had been born near his hermitage, in that same land.

3 The Bombay edition inserts an explanatory verse here—"Bhadrā, wife of the high-souled royal ṛṣi Anamitra, gave birth to a son, who was very wise, pure, who remembered his former lives, a very sovereign." See verse 27

4 Ul-lāpya Ul-lap is not given as a verb in the dictionary; ul-lāpa is given as a noun meaning "calling out in a loud voice; change of voice in grief, sickness, etc.;" but those meanings seem inadmissible here. See ul-lāpana is canto xxv, verse 10

And since you, lady, looking on me lovingly in your affection for your son, do keep on making me prattle and do embrace me much, while your hair rises up and thine eyes are suffused with tears springing from love, therefore I chanced to laugh. Hear also the reason of it. The cat intent on its own object looks on me who am attached to you; and the other also, the hag who seizes newly-born children, has vanished. Just as these two, with hearts solicitous for their own self-interest,⁷ were busy over me, even so you appear to me to be engaged in your own self-interest. But the cat and the hag who seizes newly-born children aimed at enjoying me; you on the other hand desire to obtain good results from me which shall be enjoyed gradually.

Or who is not whose kinsman? Beginning from his birth, whatever man enters into connections, the others who are connected with him are made to pass away by death, O brāhmaṇa. Moreover when he is born here, whatever connection he has with kinsmen, that also ceases with the ending of his body. This is the entire process. Hence I say, "Who is not a kinsman to one who dwells in this wordly existence? Or who is a kinsman for ever?" Is your mind bewildered? I have had two fathers indeed in this very birth, and two mothers; is it wonderful that it should be otherwise in the recurring birth of the body? Being such, I will practise austerities. Do you bring here Caitra, who is indeed the son of this king, from the village Viśāla.

Thereupon the king was astonished with his wives and kinsmen; withdrawing his feeling of ownership from that boy, he permitted him to depart of the forest. Fetching his son Caitra he made him worthy of the kingdom, after honouring the brāhmaṇa who brought him up in the belief that he was his son.

And the Indra was Mano-java, who offered a hundred sacrifices and became their lord; he was reckoned the eater of a portion of the sacrifices. CHAPTER 74

The Vaivasvata Manu-antara.

The Sun married Tvaṣṭā's daughter Sañjñā, and their children were Manu Vaivasvata and Yama-Mārkaṇḍeya narrates, how the Sun's splendour was pared down by Tvaṣṭā because she could not endure it.

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke :

Hence through that her husband's curse Yama verily was born of her, and also Yamunā this famous and very great river. And it was with pain that Sañjñā, the noble lady, endured the Sun's splendour; and then unable to bear the splendour she fell into thought—"What am I to do? Where am I to go? Where shall I go that I may find ease? And how shall the Sun, my husband, control his wrath?" So pondering in many ways, the Prajā-pati's illustrious daughter then thought much of actually taking refuge with her father.

And being honoured by him, Viśva-karman, with much respect, she remained in her father's house sometime, unreprieved. Then her father spoke to the beautiful lady, his daughter, when she had dwelt there not very long, after praising her and prefacing his speech with love and much respect—"Now while I have been seeing you my child, the days though very many may be

Now the Shadow-Sañjñā was very affectionate to other children just as to her own; Sañjñā did not use to show special attention to her daughter and two sons daily by caresses¹ and other marks of pleasure. Manu accepted that affection from her; Yama did not bear it patiently from her, and indeed he lifted his foot in anger to kick her, but, again moved with forbearance towards her, did not strike it against her body.

Sun, collecting his mind in meditation, perceived her in mare's shape practising austerities among the Northern Kurus, and the Sun understood the purpose of her austerities, namely, 'May my husband become mild in body, beautiful in form.' "Pae down my splendour now" quoth the Sun also to Sañjñā's father Viśva-karman, O brāhmaṇa. And Viśva-karman thereupon pared down the splendour of the year-revolving Sun, and obtains the praises of the gods.

Adoration to the most excellent, to the desirable one! to the utmost one, to the supreme Soul! Adoration to you whose nature pervades the entire universe, to the embodiment of Soul!" It must not be heard by those who have become empty-handed. Now may this become fruitful!) "Adoration to the being who is the universal cause, to the goal² of men of wise intellect! That portion of the Sun's splendour which was composed of the Rc became the earth, and of that portion composed of the Yajus was made the sky, and that portion composed of the Sāman became heaven.¹ Of the fifteen shreds of his splendour which were pared off by Tvastā, the high-souled Tvastā verily made Sarva's² trident, the discus of Viṣṇu and the Vasus, the very terrible weapon of Śaukara, and Agni's spear and Kuvera's palki; and all the fierce weapons of the others who are the gods' foes, and of the Yakṣas and Vidyādhara-those Viśva-kṛt made. And therefore the adorable lord bears only a sixteenth part. His splendour was pared off by Viśva-karman into fifteen parts.

Then the Sun displayed his own peerless form, and she gazing upon his true form felt a keen joy; and the Sun, the robber of the waters, brought home this his loving wife Sañjñā restored to her own shape.

Her eldest son then became Vaivasvata Manu; and her second son Yama became the righteous-eyed judge because of the curse. His father himself made an end of the curse by saying—"Insects taking flesh¹ from his foot shall fall to the earth." And because he is righteous of eye, impartial to friend and foe, there the Dispeller of darkness appointed him over the southern region.² And Yamunā became the river which flows from the recesses of mount Kalinda. The Aśvins were made the gods' physicians by their high-souled father. And Revanta also was appointed king of the Guhyakas. Hear also from me the places assigned to the Shadow-Sañjñā's sons.

4 This is a mistaken title as the canto shows

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke :

The Ādityas the Vasus, the Rudras, the Sādhyas, the Viśve-devas, the Maruts, the Bhṛgu and the Āngirases are the eight whereof the classes of gods are traditionally held to be composed. The Ādityas, the Vasus, the Rudras are to be known as Kaśyapa's sons; and the Sādhyas, the Vasus,¹ the Viśve-devas are the three groups of Dharma's sons. Now the Bhṛgu class of gods are the sons of Bhṛgu, and the Āngirases are the sons of Āngiras. And it is the present creation. Mārka is to be known as the lord at present.

And the Indra is named Urjjasvin, high-souled, the consumer of a share of the sacrifices. Now all these lords of the thirty gods, who have passed away, and who have not yet come, and who reign now, are to be known as having equal characteristics— all indeed are thousand-eyed, wielders of the thunder-bolt, smiters asunder of cities; all are bestowers of gifts, pre-eminent, bearers of crests, walking like elephants; they are all receivers of a hundred sacrifices, dominating created things with their splendour, possessing the good qualities of sovereignty with righteousness and other pure actions, masters of the past, the future and the present.

called heaven³—such is spoken of as the triple-world.

3. Divya.

4. Ikṣvāku was the eldest son of Manu Vaivasvata. He got Madhyadesā and was the ancestor of several dynasties, the chief of which was the Solar dynasty that reigned in Ayodhyā (Hari-Vamśa, x. 634, and xi. 661-8; M., Bh., Sabhā-P., xiii. 568-9; Rāmāy., Ādi-K. lxxii. and Ayodh.-K. cxix).

5. Or Nābhāga. He was father or ancestor of famous king Ambariṣa (Hari-V., x. 613 and 641; M.-Bh., Drona-P. lxiv; Sānti-P. xxix. 993-7, and ccxxxiv. 8597; and Anuśās.P. cxxxvii. 6252).

6. This is given as a single name, but should be two; thus for Dhṛṣṭa-śarmātir read Dhṛṣṭaḥ Śaryātir, "Dhṛṣṭa and Śaryāti" according to the Bombay edition. Dhṛṣṭa or Dhṛṣṭu was ancestor of the Dhārṣṇaka kṣattriyas (Hari-V., x. 613 and 642). Sarmāti should be Śaryāti or Śaryāte; he dwelt in the country around the Gulf of Cambay, and founded a dynasty which reigned in Ānarta (Hari-V., x. 613 and 642-9; M.-Bh., Vana-P. cxxi. 10312, and cxxii; Anuśās.-P., xxx. 1945; Śata-p Brāh. iv. 1. and page 282 note).

7. Or Nariṣya; he is said to have been the progenitor of the Śakas (Hari-V., x. 614 and 641).

8. This and the next name should apparently be read as one, viz., for Nābhago diṣṭa read Nābhagāriṣṭa, or better, Nābhagādiṣṭa. He is said to have had two sons, who were vaiśyas and became brāhmaṇas (Hari-V., x. 614, and xi. 658).

9. See the preceding note.

10. This should be Karūṣa as the Bombay edition reads. He was the progenitor of the Karūṣas, who were reckoned as kṣattriyas (Hari-V., x. 614, and x. 658); they occupied the country of which Rewa is the centre, see page 268 note.

1. This seems a mistake for Maruts; for vasavo read maruto? But both editions read alike.

2. Divah; read divam, neuter?

A story of him is told in cantos xx and xxi ante, and a long story in M-Bh Udyoga P cv and vxiii-cxviii. He is also referred to in Śānti-P cclxxxix, but the Gālava mentioned in Hari-V, xx 1047-50 belonged to a later period and was probably a descendant

In times ago in the Svārociṣa period, a king named Su-ratha, sprung of the race of Caitra, reigned over the whole earth. And while he guarded his subjects duly as if they were his own children, there arose hostile kings, who did not destroy the Kolas.¹ He the bearer of a very powerful sceptre had war with them, and was defeated in war by them, inferior though they were, those non-destroyers of the Kolas. Then coming to his own city he reigned as king over his own country. That illustrious king was attacked then by those powerful enemies. His powerful and corrupt ministers, who were evil-disposed to a weak person, thereupon robbed him to treasury and army even there in his own city. Hence the king deprived of his sovereignty departed alone on horseback to a dense forest under the pretence of hunting.

1. Kolāvidhvarṣinah. This is an adjective in the nom. plural, agreeing with bhūpāh, and not a gen. case; and it is also a single compound, as appears from the next verse. Besides various fanciful explanations, the commentator renders kola as śōkara, and the whole word as "Yavanas." It seems plain that the Kolas mean aboriginal races, the Kols, and the whole word denotes some enemies who were in alliance with the Kolas.

dwelt there some time, honoured by the muni. And roaming hither and thither in that fine hermitage of the muni, he fell into thought there then, his mind being distraught by selfishness, egotistical—"Lost indeed is the city which I guarded formerly. Whether it is guarded righteously or not by those my servants of wicked conduct, I know not. My chief war-elephant, always ardent, has passed into the power of my foes; what pleasures will he obtain?

Hearing this speech of the king, which was uttered in friendly mood, the vaiśya said that I am Samādhi by name, born in a family of wealthy folk, and have been cast out by my sons and wife, who are wicked through greed for wealth. And bereft of riches, wife and sons, taking my wealth I have come to the forest, unhappy and cast out by my trusted kinsmen. In this state I know not what is the behaviour of my sons as regards prosperity or adversity, nor of my family nor of my wife. Here I dwell. Is welfare theirs at home now or ill-luck? How are they? My mind does not entertain implacability; and my mind, which bears affection as of a master to his family, is affectionate to those very persons, who have abandoned affection for a father and driven me out in their greed for riches. I do not comprehend, although I know it, O high-minded Sir, how it is that the minds prone to love even towards worthless kinsmen. On their account my sighs flow and distress of mind arises. Adorable Sir! I desire to ask you one thing; tell me that; since it tends to afflict my mind without producing submissiveness of my intellect. I have a selfish feeling for my kingdom, even with regard to all the requisites of regal administration, although I know what it is, yet like one who is ignorant; how is this, O best of munis? This is the contemplation-sleep of the lord of the world, and the Great Illusion that comes from Hari; by it the world is completely deluded. When she reveals herself in order to accomplish the purposes of the gods, it is then said in the world that she is born; she is also named the Eternal One.¹ While the adorable lord Viṣṇu, stretching Śeṣa out, wooed the sleep of contemplation at the end of the kalpa, when the universe was converted into absolute ocean, then two terrible Asuras named Madhu and Kaiṭabha,² springing from the root of Viṣṇu's ear, sought to slay Brahmā.

Slaughter of the army of the Asura Mahiṣa

The gods were defeated in a great battle formerly by the Asuras and driven from heaven, and the Asura Mahiṣa became supreme. —All the gods gave forth their special energies, which combined and formed the goddess Caṇḍikā.—They gave her their weapons, and she fought with and destroyed the Asuras.

Having thus heard the words of the gods, Viṣṇu was wroth and Śiva also; both their faces became furrowed with frowns. Then issued forth great energy¹ from the mouth of Viṣṇu who was full of intense anger, and from the mouths of Brahmā and Śiva; and from the bodies of Indra and the other gods went forth a very great energy; and it all amalgamated.

The gods beheld the mass of intense energy there like a burning mountain, pervading the other regions of the sky with its blaze; and that unparalleled energy born of the bodies of all the gods, which pervaded the three worlds with its light, gathering into one became a female. by what was Śiva's energy her face was developed, and by Yama's energy grew her hair, and her arms by Viṣṇu's energy, by the Moon's her twin breasts; and her waist came into being by Indra's energy, and by Varuṇa's her legs and thighs, by the Earth's energy her hips, by Brahmā's energy her feet, her toes by the Sun's energy, and by the Vasus' energy her hands and fingers, and by Kuvera's her nose; and her teeth grew by the Prajāpati's energy, and three eyes were developed by Agni's energy; and her eyebrows were the energy of the two twilights, and her ears Vāyu's energy; and the coming into being of the energies of the other gods became the auspicious goddess.

Then gazing at her, who had sprung from the combined energies of all the gods, the Immortals who were afflicted by Mahiṣa felt a keen joy.¹ The bearer of the bow Pināka drawing a trident forth from his own trident gave it to her; and Kṛṣṇa gave a discus pulling it out of his own discus; and Varuṇa gave her a conch, Agni a spear, Māruta gave a bow and a quiver filled with arrows.²

And Śeṣa, the lord of all the serpents, who supports this earth, gave her a serpent-necklace adorned with large gems. Seeing all the three worlds¹ greatly agitated, the foes of the Immortals uniting all their armies rose up together, with uplifted weapons. "Ha! what is this?" exclaimed the Asura Mahiṣa in wrath, and rushed surrounded by all the Asuras towards that roar. Then he saw the goddess, pervading the three worlds with her light, causing the earth to bow at the touch of her feet, grazing the firmament with her crest, shaking the whole of Pātāla with the twang of her bow-string, standing pervading the sky all around with her thousand arms. Then began a battle between the goddess and the enemies of the gods, in which every region of the sky was illumined with the weapons and arms hurled in abundance.

And the Asura Mahiṣa's general, the great Asura named Cikṣura, fought with her; and the Asura Cāmara attended by his cavalry fought along with others. The great Asura named Udagra with six myriads of chariots fought; and Mahāhanu with a thousand myriads gave battle; and the great Asura Asi-loman with fifty millions; with six hundred myriads Vāskala fought in the battle; Ugra-darśana² with many troops of thousands of elephants and horses, and surrounded with ten million chariots fought in that battle; and the Asura named Viḍāla fought in the battle there, surrounded with fifty myriads of chariots. And other great Asuras in myriads, surrounded with chariots, elephants and horses, fought with the goddess in that battle there.

Now the Asura Mahiṣa was surrounded with thousands of ten million times ten millions of chariots and elephants and horses in the battle there. With iron maces and javelins, with spears and clubs, with swords, with axes and halberds they fought in the battle against the goddess. And some hurled spears, and others nooses, but they assailed the goddess with blows from their swords in order to slay her.

And then the goddess Caṇḍikā clove, as it were in merest play, those weapons and arms by raining forth her own weapons and arms. The goddess betrayed no exertion in her countenance, while the gods and ṛṣis were praising her. The queenly goddess hurled her weapons and arms at the Asuras' bodies. The lion also that bore the goddess, enraged and with ruffled mane, stalked among the armies of Asuras, like fire through the forests.

These fought with axes, with javelins and swords and halberds, destroying the Asuras bands, being invigorated by the goddess' energy. And of these bands some raised a din with large drums, and others with conches, and others besides with drums, in that great battle-festival.

And large rivers formed of torrents of blood straightway flowed along there amidst the armies of Asuras, and among the elephants, Asuras and horses.

The Devī-māhātmya.

The slaying of the Asura Mahiṣa.

The description of the battle is continued—The goddess slew the Asura chiefs in single combat and finally the Asuras Mahiṣa.

Now the great Asura, the general Cikṣura, seeing that army being slaughtered, advanced in wrath to fight with Ambikā. The Asura rained a shower of arrows on the goddess in the battle, as a cloud deluges mount Meru's summit with a shower of rain. The goddess, cutting asunder the masses of his arrows then as it were in play, smote his horses with her arrows and their charioteer; and split his bow forthwith and his banner raised high aloft; and with swift missiles pierced his limbs as he stood with shattered bow.

His bow shattered, his chariot useless, his horses killed, his charioteer slain, the Asura armed with sword and shield rushed at the goddess. With the utmost celerity he smote the lion on the head with his sharp-edged sword, and struck the goddess also on her left arm. His sword shivered to pieces as it touched her arm (O prince). Thereon red-eyed with anger, he grasped his pike, and he, the great Asura, flung it at Bhadra-kālī, as it were the Sun's orb blazing brightly with its splendour from out the sky. Seeing that pike falling on her, the goddess hurled her pike, and it shattered that pike into a hundred fragments and the great Asura also.

When he, Mahiṣa's very valiant general, was slain, Cāmara, the afflicter of the thirty gods, advanced mounted on an elephant; and he also hurled his spear at the goddess. Down to the ground Ambikā quickly struck it, assailed with a contemptuous hoot and rendered lustre-less. Seeing his spear broken and fallen, Cāmara filled with rage flung a pike; and that she split with her arrows. Then the lion leaping up fastened on to the hollow of the elephant's forehead, and fought in close combat aloft with that foe of the thirty gods; but both then fell, as they were fighting, from the elephant to the ground. They fought closely locked together with most terrible blows. Then quickly springing up to the sky, and descending, the lion severed Cāmara's head with a blow from his paw.

Now, as his army was being thus destroyed utterly, the Asura Mahiṣa in his own buffalo-shape terrified her troops. Some he laid low by a blow from his muzzle, and others by stamping with his hooves, and others because they were lashed with his tail and gashed with his horns, and others again by his impetuous rush, his bellowing and his wheeling career, and others by the blast of his breath—thus he laid them low on the face of the earth. Having laid low the van of her army, the Asura rushed to attack the great goddess' lion.

Caṇḍikā looked on the great Asura, as swollen with rage he rushed on, and gave a way to her wrath then in order to slay him. She flung her noose full over him, and bound the great Asura fast. And he quitted his buffalo shape when held bound in the great battle, and then became a lion suddenly. While Ambikā is cutting off his head he took the appearance of a man with scimitar in hand. Straightway the goddess with her arrows swiftly pierced the man together with his scimitar and shield. Then he became a huge elephant, and tugged at her great lion with his trunk and roared, but the goddess cut off his trunk with her sword as he made his tugs.

Next the great Asura assumed his buffalo shape again, and so shook the three worlds with all that is moveable and in moveable therein. Enraged thereat Caṇḍikā, the mother of the world, quaffed a sublime beverage again and again,² and laughed as her eyes gleamed ruddy. And the Asura roared out, puffed up with his strength and valour and frenzy, and hurled mountains against Caṇḍikā with his horns. And she shivering to atoms with showers of arrows those mountain that he hurled, spoke to him in confused words, while he mouth was rendered ruddier by the mead that she had drunk.

2. See chap. 79 verse 29.

Roar, roar on your brief moment, O fool, the while I quaff this mead! The gods shall soon roar, when I shall slay then ever here.

Exclaiming thus she leaped upwards and sat herself on that great Asura, and kicked him on the neck with her foot and struck him with her spear. And thereupon he, being assailed by her foot, half issued forth from his own mouth in sooth, being completely encompassed by the goddess' valour. That great Asura being thus attacked half issued forth indeed. The goddess struck off his head with her great sword and laid him low.

When Mahiṣa was slain, all created things in the three worlds then uttered the shout 'Conquer you!' along with gods and Asuras and men."

The Devī-māhātmya.

The Slaying of the Asura Mahiṣa concluded.

The gods poured forth their praises to Caṇḍikā on her victory—And she gave them the boon that she would always befriend them, if they recalled her to mind in calamities.

3. For -śiro-'dharāṃsā read śirodharāṃsā as in the Bombay edition.

Vārtā seems obscure; the commentary explains it as vṛttānta-rūpā, "having the form of events" or "having the form of history;" or as kṛṣi-go-rakṣādi-vṛttir, "following the occupations of cultivation, cattle-rearing and such like."

2. Medhā.

action.¹ Thereby the gods were scattered, deprived of their sovereignties and put to rout. The thirty gods, bereft of their dominion and set at nought by those two great Asuras, all recall to mind that never-vanquished goddess,—“You did grant us the boon,² ‘As you when in calamities shall call me to mind,³ that very moment will I put an end to all your direst calamities.’” Making this resolve the gods went to Himavat, lord among mountains, and there raised their hymn to the goddess, who is Viṣṇu’s illusive power.⁴

The Bombay edition inserts a line here—anyeṣāṃ cādhiḥkāraṇ saḥ svayam evādhiṣṭhatai and reads the first three words with the preceding words, but does not explain the last four in its commentary. 1. Bhakti-vinamra-mūrttibhiḥ must be taken with asmābhir, though it is ill-placed as the verse stands. It would be better to read the second half of the verse thus—

Yā ca smṛtā bhakti-vinamra-mūrttibhiḥ
Sarvāpadas tat- kṣaṇam eva hanti nah.

2. Hantu, "may she destroy," would be better than hanti.

The ṛṣi spoke

While the gods were thus engaged in offering hymns and other reverential acts, Pārvatī came there to bathe in the water of the Ganges, O prince. She, the beautiful-browed, said to those gods,—"Whom do you, lords, hymn here?" And springing forth from the treasure-house³ of her body the auspicious goddess spoke—"For me this hymn is uttered by the assembled gods, who have been set at nought by the Daitya Śumbha and routed in battle by Niśumbha."

Because Ambikā issued forth from the treasure-house of Pārvatī's body, she is therefore named in song as Kauśikī⁴ among all the worlds. Now after she had issued forth, the other also, even Pārvatī, became Kṛṣṇā; she is celebrated as Kālikā; she fixed her abode on Mount Himavat.

Thereafter Caṇḍa, and Muṇḍa, the two servants of Śumbha and Niśumbha, saw Ambikā displaying her sublime and most captivating form; and both spoke out to Śumbha;—"What woman then, most surpassingly captivating, dwells here, illuminating Mount Himavat, O great king? Such sublime beauty was never in sooth seen by anyone anywhere; let it be ascertained if she is any goddess, and let her be taken possession of, O lord of the Asuras.

3. Kosha; but kośa is better.

4. Kauśikī is better. The derivation is of course absurd.

A gem among women, surpassingly beautiful in body, illuminating the regions of the sky with her lustre, there she is then, O lord of the Daityas; deign, Sir, to look at her. Moreover, whatever gcms, precious stones, elephants, horses and other valuable things indeed exist in the three worlds, O lord, all those display their splendour at this present time in your house.

Here is the Nidhi Mahā-padma,¹ captured from the Lord of wealth. And the Ocean gave a garland made of filaments and of undying lotus flowers. In your house stands Varuṇa's umbrella, which streams with gold. And here is the choice chariot that belonged to Prajā-pati formerly. You, O lord, have carried off Death's power which is named Utkrānti-dā.² The noose of the Ocean-king is in your brother's possession.

And Niśumbha has every kind of gem which is produced in the sea. Agni also gave you two garments which are purified by fire. Thus, O lord of the Daityas, all gems have been captured by you; why do you not seize this auspicious lady, this gem of womankind?

The ṛṣi spoke

Śumbha, on hearing this speech then from Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa, sent the great Asura Su-grīva as messenger to the goddess, saying –

शुम्भ उवाच

“Go and address her thus and thus according to my words, and lightly conduct the matter so that she may come to me of her own good pleasure.” He went to where the goddess sat on a very bright spot in the mountain and spoke gently with mellifluous voice.

O goddess! Śumbha, lord of the Daityas, is supreme lord, over the three worlds. A messenger am I, sent by him; to your presence here I have come. Harken to what he has said, whose command is never resisted among all beings of divine origin, and who has vanquished every foe of the Daityas—"Mine are all the three worlds; obedient to my authority are the gods, I eat every portion of the sacrifices separately.

The choicest gems in the three worlds are altogether under my power; and so are the finest elephants and the chariot of the lord of the gods, since I have captured them. That gem among horses, named Uccaiḥśravasa, which came forth at the churning of the sea of milk, was presented to me by the immortals who prostrated themselves before me.

Either to me, or to my younger brother Niśumbha of wide-reaching prowess, approach you, O lady of quick side-glances, since you are in truth a gem. Supreme dominion beyond compare you shall gain by wedding me. Understand and consider this, and come to wedlock with me!"

इत्युक्ता सा तदा देवी गम्भीरान्तःस्मिता जगौ।

दुर्गा भगवती भद्रा ययेदं धार्यते जगत्॥७०॥

The ṛṣi spoke

Thus accosted the goddess, smiling deeply within herself, she, Durgā the adorable and good, who supports this world, sang this reply then.

सत्यमुक्तं त्वया नात्र मिथ्या किञ्चित्त्वयोदितम्।

त्रैलोक्याधिपतिः शुम्भो निशुम्भश्चापि तादृशः॥७१॥

किं त्वत्र यत्प्रतिज्ञातं मिथ्या तत्क्रियते कथम्।

श्रूयतामल्पबुद्धित्वात्प्रतिज्ञा या कृता पुरा॥७२॥

The goddess spoke

Truly have you spoken; nought have you uttered falsely herein. Sovereign of the three worlds is Śumbha, and like to him is Niśumbha also! But how can that which has been promised concerning this myself be fulfilled falsely? Hearken, what vow I made formerly by reason of my small understanding at that time,—

यो मां जयति संग्रामे यो मे दर्पं व्यपोहति।

यो मे प्रतिबलो लोके स मे भर्ता भविष्यति॥७३॥

तदा गच्छतु शुम्भोऽत्र निशुम्भो वा महासुरः।

'He who vanquishes me in fight, who forces my pride from me, and who is my match in strength in the world, he shall be my husband.' Let Śumbha come here then, or Niśumbha the great Asura; let him vanquish me—what need of delay here? and let him lightly take my hand in marriage!

The messenger spoke

Proud are you! Talk not so before me, O goddess! What male in the three worlds may stand front to front with Śumbha and Niśumbha? All the gods verily stand not face to face with even the other Daityas in battle, O goddess; how much less can you so stand, a woman single-handed!

With Śumbha and those other Daityas, against whom Indra and all the other gods stood not in battle, how shall you, a woman, venture face to face? Do you, being such, to whom I have in sooth delivered my message, go near to Śumbha and Niśumbha; let it not be that you shall go with your dignity shattered in that you will be dragged thither by your hair!

The goddess spoke

So strong as this is Śumbha! and so exceedingly heroic is Niśumbha! What can I do, since there stands my ill-considered promise of long ago? Go you yourself; make known respectfully to the lord of the Asuras all this that I have said to you, and let him do whatever is fitting.

The Devi-māhātmya:

The slaying of Śumbha and Niśumbha's general Dhūmra-locana. Śumbha despatched his general Dhūmra-locana and an army to capture the goddess and she destroyed them. —He then despatched Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa with another army.

ऋषिरुवाच

The ṛṣi spoke

The messenger, on hearing this speech from the goddess, was filled with indignation, and approaching related it fully to the Daitya king. The Asura monarch then, after hearing that report from his messenger, was wroth and commanded Dhūmra-locana, a chieftain of the Daityas;—"Ho! Dhūmra-locana, haste you together with your army; fetch by force that shrew, who will be unnerved when dragged along by her hair. Or if any man besides stands up to offer her deliverance, let him be slain, be he an Immortal, a Yakṣa or a Gandharva forsooth."

ऋषिरुवाच

The ṛṣi spoke

Thereupon at his command the Daitya Dhūmra-locana went forthwith quickly, accompanied by sixty thousand Asuras. On seeing the goddess stationed on the snowy mountain, he cried aloud to her there—"Come forward to the presence of Śumbha and Niśumbha; if you will not, lady, approach my lord with affection now, I will here take you by force, who will be unnerved since you shall be dragged along by your hair!"

श्रीदेव्युवाच

दैत्येश्वरेण प्रहितो बलवान्बलसंवृतः।

The goddess spoke

Sent by the king of the Daityas, mighty yourself, and accompanied by an army, you do thus take me by force—then what can I do to you?

ऋषिरुवाच

इत्युक्तः सोभ्यधावत्तामसुरो धूम्रलोचनः।

The ṛṣi spoke

At this reply the Asura Dhūmra-locana rushed towards her. Then Ambikā with a mere roar reduced him to ashes.

And the great army of Asuras enraged poured on Ambikā a shower both of sharp arrows and of javelins and axes. The lion that carried¹ the goddess, shaking his mane in anger and uttering a most terrific roar, fell on the army of Asuras; he slaughtered some Asuras with a blow from his fore-paw, and other with his mouth, and others, very great Asuras, by striking them with his hind foot.²

When he heard that Asura Dhūmra-locana was slain by the goddess, and all his army besides was destroyed by the goddess' lion, Śumbha, the lord of the Daityas, fell into a rage and his lip quivered greatly, and he commanded the two mighty Asuras Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa,—“Ho, Caṇḍa! Ho, Muṇḍa! take with you a multitude of troops and go there; and going there bring her here speedily, dragging her by her hair or binding her; if you have a doubt of that, then let her be slain outright in fight by all the Asuras brandishing all their weapons. When that shrew in slain and her lion striken down, seize her, Ambikā, bind her and bring her quickly!”

The Devī-māhātmya.

The slaying of Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa.

The goddess Kālī destroyed the second Asura army and also the generals Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa—Caṇḍikā gave Kālī as a reward the name Cāmuṇḍā.

Then at his command the Daityas, led by Caṇḍa and Muṇḍa, and arrayed in the four-fold order of an army, marched with weapons uplifted. Soon they saw the goddess, slightly smiling, seated upon the lion, on a huge golden peak of the majestic mountain. On seeing her some of them made a strenuous effort to capture her, and others approached her holding their bows bent and their swords drawn.

Thereat Ambikā uttered her wrath aloud against those foes, and her countenance then grew dark as ink in her wrath. Out from the surface of her forehead, which was rugged with frowns, issued suddenly Kālī of the terrible countenance, armed with a sword and noose, bearing a many-coloured skull-topped staff,¹ decorated with a garland of skulls, clad in a tiger's skin, very appalling because of her emaciated flesh, exceedingly wide of mouth, lolling out her tongue terribly, having deep-sunk reddish eyes, and filling the regions of the sky with her roars. She fell upon the great Asuras impetuously, dealing slaughter among the host, and devoured that army of the gods' foes there.

Taking up the elephants with one hand she flung them into her mouth, together with their rearmen and drivers and their warrior-riders and bells. Flinging likewise warrior with his horses, and chariot with its driver into her mouth, she ground them most frightfully with her teeth. She seized one by the hair, and another by the neck; and she kicked another with her foot, and crushed another against her breast.

She crushed all that host of mighty and high-spirited Asuras; and devoured some and battered others; some were slain with her sword, some were struck with her skull-topped staff, and other Asuras met their death being wounded with the edge of her teeth.

Seeing all that host of Asuras laid low in a moment, Caṇḍa rushed against her, Kālī, who was exceedingly appalling. Muṇḍa the great Asura covered her, the terrible-eyed goddess, with very terrible showers of arrows and with discuses hurled in thousands. Those discuses seemed to be

And Muṇḍa also rushed at her when he saw Caṇḍa laid low; him: also she felled to the ground, stricken with her scimitar in her fury. After issuing these commands Śumbha, the lord of the Asuras, who ruled with fear, went forth, attended by many thousands of great soldiers. Caṇḍikā seeing that most terrible army at hand, filled the space between the earth and the firmament with the twanging of her bow-string. Thereon her lion roared exceedingly loud, O king; and Ambikā augmented⁷ those roars with the clanging of her bell. Kālī, filling the regions of the sky with the noise from her bowstring, from her lion and from her bell, and expanding her mouth wide with her terrific roars, had the predominance.⁸

At this moment, O king, in order to destroy the gods' foes, and for the well-being of the lion-like Immortals, there issued forth endowed with excessive vigour and strength the Energies¹⁰ from the bodies of Brahmā, Śiva, Guha and Viṣṇu and of Indra also, and went in the forms of those gods to Caṇḍikā. Whatever was the form of each god, and whatever his ornaments and vehicle, in that very appearance his Energy advanced to fight with the Asuras.

Maheśvara's Energy slew Daityas with her trident, and Viṣṇu's Energy with her discus, and Kumāra's Energy, very wrathful, slew them with her javelin. And those Asuras who sprang from that Asura's blood pervaded the whole world; thereat the gods fell into the utmost terror.

Seeing the gods dejected, Caṇḍikā spoke with haste; she said to Kālī, " O Cāmuṇḍā! stretch out your mouth wide; with this mouth do you quickly take in the great Asuras, which are the drops of blood, that have come into being out of Rakta-bīja at the descent of my weapon on him. Roam about in the battle, devouring the great Asuras who sprang from him; so shall this Daitya with his blood ebbing away meet destruction. These fierce demons are being devoured by you and at the same time no others will be produced."

The goddess smote Rakta-bīja with her dart, her thunder-bolt, arrows, swords and spears, when Cāmuṇḍā drank up his blood. Stricken with that multitude of weapons, he fell on the earth's surface, and the great Asura Rakta-bīja became blood-less, O king. Thereat the thirty gods gained joy unparalleled, O king. The band of Mothers which sprang from them broke into a dance, being intoxicated with blood.

The Devī-māhātmya.

The slaying of Niśumbha.

Niśumbha attacked the goddess Caṇḍikā and was worsted in single combat.—Śumbha came to his help, but the goddess foiled him, and slew Niśumbha—Numbers of the Asuras were destroyed.

The king spoke

Wonderful is this that you, Sir, have related to me, the majesty of the goddess' exploits in connection with the slaying of Rakta-bīja; and I wish to hear further what deed did Śumbha do after Rakta-bīja was killed, and what the very irascible Niśumbha did.

The ṛṣi spoke

After Rakta-bīja was slain and other demons were killed in the fight, the Asura Śumbha gave way to unbounded wrath, and Niśumbha also. Pouring out his indignation at beholding his great army being slaughtered, Niśumbha then rushed forward with the flower of the Asura army. In front of him and behind and on both sides great Asuras, biting their lips and enraged, advanced to slay the goddess. Śumbha also went forward, mighty in valour, surrounded with his own troops, to slay Caṇḍikā in his rage, after engaging in battle with the Mothers.

Then occurred a desperate combat between the goddess and Śumbha and Niśumbha, who both, like two thunder-clouds, rained a most tempestuous shower of arrows on her. Caṇḍikā with multitudes of arrows quickly split the arrows shot by them, and smote the two Asura lords on their limbs with her numerous weapons.

Niśumbha grasping a sharp scimitar and glittering shield struck the lion, the noble beast that bore the goddess, on the head. When her animal was struck, the goddess quickly clove Niśumbha's superb sword with a horse-shoe-shaped arrow, and also his shield on which eight moons were portrayed. When his shield was cloven and his sword too, the Asura hurled his spear; and that his missile also, as it came towards her, she split in two with her discus.

Then Niśumbha, the Dānava, puffed up with wrath, seized a dart; and that also, when it came, the goddess shattered with a blow of her fist. And then aiming his club he flung it against Caṇḍikā, yet that was shivered by the goddess' trident and became ashes. As that lordly Daitya then advanced with battle-axe in hand, the goddess struck him with a multitude of arrows and laid him low on the ground.

When his brother Niśumbha, who was terrible in prowess, fell to the ground, Śumbha in utmost fury strode forward to slay Ambikā. And he, standing in his chariot, appeared to fill the entire sky with his eight arms, which were lifted far on high grasping his superb weapons.

Then her lion filled the heaven, the earth and the ten regions of the sky with loud roars, which checked the copious flow of the exudation from the demons' rutting elephants. Kālī springing upward then struck the heaven and the earth with both her hands; the boom thereof drowned those previous sounds. Śiva-dūtī¹ uttered a loud inauspicious laugh. At those sounds the Asuras trembled;² Śumbha gave way to utmost rage. When Ambikā cried out "Stand, O evil-souled! stand!" the gods who had taken their stations in the air then called to her, "Be you victorious!"

The spear flaming most terribly, which Śumbha approaching hurled, that, gleaming like a mass of fire as it came along, was driven aside by a great fire-brand. The vault between the three worlds reverberated with Śumbha's lion-like roaring, but the dreadful sound of the slaughter among his soldiers surpassed that, O king. The goddess split the arrows shot by Śumbha, and Śumbha the arrows that she discharged, each with her and his sharp arrows in hundreds and thousands.

Thereupon Niśumbha, regaining consciousness, seized his bow again and struck the goddess, and Kālī and the lion with arrows. And the Dānava lord, that son of Diti, putting forth a myriad arms, again covered Caṇḍikā with a myriad discuses.³

The goddess then enraged, she, Durgā who destroys the afflictions of adversity, split those discuses and those arrows with her own arrows. Then Niśumbha seizing his club rushed impetuously at Caṇḍikā to slay her outright, with the Daitya host surrounding him. As he was just falling upon her, Caṇḍikā swiftly clove his club with her sharp-edged scimitar. And he took hold of a dart. Caṇḍikā with a dart hurled swiftly pierced Niśumbha, the afflicter of the Immortals, in the heart, as he approached with dart in hand.

The lion then devoured those Asuras whose necks he had crushed with his savage teeth, and Kālī and Śiva-dūtī devoured the others. Some great Asuras perished, being pierced through by the spear held by Kumāra's Energy; others were driven back by the water purified by the spell uttered by Brahmā's Energy; and others fell, pierced by the trident wielded by Śiva's Energy; some were pounded to dust on the ground by blows from the snout of Varāha's Energy; some Dānavas were out to pieces by the discus hurled by Viṣṇu's Energy; and others again by the thunder-bolt discharged from the fingers of Indra's Energy. Some Asuras perished outright, some perished by reason of the great battle, and others were devoured by Kālī, Śiva-dūtī and the lion.

The Devī-māhātmya.

The slaying of Śumbha.

Ambikā absorbed all the other goddesses, and fighting with Śumbha in single combat, killed him.—The universe was then filled with joy.

ऋषिरुवाच

The ṛṣi spoke

Seeing his brother Niśumbha slain, who was dear to him as his life, and his army being slaughtered, Śumbha in wrath spoke thus—
 "O Durgā, who are tainted with the arrogance of strength, bring not your pride here, you who, trusting in the strength of the other goddesses, do fight in exceeding haughtiness!"

श्रीदेव्युवाच

The goddess spoke

Alone verily am I in the world here; what other goddess is there besides me? See, vile one! that these goddesses, who have their divine power from me, are entering into me indeed.

ऋषिरुवाच

Then all those goddesses, Brahmāṇī and the others, became absorbed into the goddess' breasts; Ambikā then remained alone indeed.

श्रीदेव्युवाच

अहं विभूत्या बहुभिरिह रूपैर्यदास्थिता।

The goddess spoke

Whereas I existed with my divine power in many forms here—that has been drawn in by me, truly alone I stand now. Be you steadfast in combat!

The ṛṣi spoke

Thereupon commenced a battle between them both, the goddess and Śumbha, while all the gods and the Asuras looked on—a battle without quarter. With showers of arrows, with sharp weapons and also with pitiless missiles both engaged anew in a combat which set all the world in fear.

And the lord of the Daityas broke the heavenly missiles, which Ambikā discharged in hundreds, with weapons that parried them. And the supreme goddess in merest play broke the heavenly missiles that he discharged, with fierce shouts, ejaculations and other sounds. Then the Asura covered the goddess with hundreds of arrows, and the goddess enraged thereat split his bow also with her arrows.

And when his bow was split the lord of the Daityas took up his spear. The goddess split it, as he held it in his hand, with a discus. Next the supreme monarch of the Daityas, seizing his scimitar and sun-like shield, on which a hundred moons were portrayed, rushed at the goddess¹ at that moment. Just as he was falling upon her, Caṇḍikā hastily split his scimitar with sharp arrows shot from her bow, and his shield also which was spotless as the sun's rays.

terrible mace, being ready to slay Ambikā. As he was falling upon her, she clove his mace with sharp arrows; nevertheless raising his fist he rushed swiftly at her. The lordly Daitya brought his fist down on the goddess' heart, and the goddess also smote him on his breast with her palm. Wounded by the blow of her palm the Daitya king fell suddenly on the earth; and again indeed he rose up, and springing upward he seized the goddess and mounted on high into the sky. There also Caṇḍikā, being without any support, fought with him.

The Daitya and Caṇḍikā then fought at first with each other in the sky in a close combat, which wrought dismay among the Siddhas and munis; after carrying on the close combat for a very long time with him, Ambikā lifted him up then and whirled him around and flung him on the earth. When flung thus he touched the earth, he raised his fist hastily and rushed, evil of soul as he was, with the wish to kill Caṇḍikā.

All the bands of gods then grew exceedingly joyful in mind, when he was slain; the Gandharvas sang out sweetly, and others of them sounded their instruments, and the bebies of Apsarases danced; and favourable breezes blew, very brilliant grew the sun, and the tranquil sacred fires blazed freely, and tranquil became the strange sounds that had occurred in the regions of the sky.

The goddess spoke

When the twenty-eighth age has arrived, in the Vaivasvata Manv-antara, two other great Asuras shall be born, Śumbha and Niśumbha. Then born as the offspring of Yaśodā's womb in the cowherd Nanda's house, and dwelling on the Vindhya mountains, I will destroy them both. And again becoming incarnate in a very terrible form on the face of the earth, I will slay the Vaipracitta² Dānavas; and when I devour those fierce and great Vaipracitta Asuras, my teeth shall become red like the flowers of the pomegranate. Hence the gods in Svarga and men in the world of mortals praising me shall always talk to me as "Red-toothed."³

Next, O you gods, I shall support⁵ the whole world with the life-sustaining vegetables, which shall grow out of my own body, during a period of heavy rain. CHAPTER 89

The Devī-māhātmya.

The slaying of Śumbha and Niśumbha concluded.

The goddess descants on the merits of this poem and the beneficent results of reading and listening to it.—The gods regained their rights and the Daityas departed to Pātāla. Her attributes and beneficence are extolled.

श्रीदेव्युवाच

The goddess spoke

And whoever with mind composed shall praise me constantly with these hymns, I will quite down every trouble for him assuredly. And those who shall celebrate the destruction of Madhu and Kaitabha, the slaughter of the Asura Mahiṣa, and the slaying of Śumbha and Niśumbha likewise; and those also who shall listen¹ in faith to this poem of my sublime majesty on the eighth day of the lunar fortnight, on the fourteenth and on the ninth, with intent mind, to them shall happen no wrong-doing whatever, nor calamities that arise from wrong-doing, nor poverty, nor indeed deprivation of their desires.²

Never shall he experience fear from enemies, from robbers, nor from kings, nor from weapon or fire or water-flood. Hence this poem of my majesty must be read by men of composed minds and listened to by them always with faith, for it is the supreme course of blessings. Now may this poem of my majesty quell all kinds of calamities, which arise from grievous pestilence,³ and the three-fold portent.

Where this poem is duly read constantly at my sanctuary, I will never forsake that place, and there my presence is fixed. At the offering of the bali, and during worship, in the ceremonies with fire, and at a great festival, all this story of my exploits must verily be proclaimed and listened to. I will accept with kindness both the bali worship that is paid, and the oblation by fire that is offered, by him who understands or him who understands not.

मनुष्यो मत्प्रसादेन भविष्यति न संशयः॥ १२॥

And at the great annual worship that is performed in autumn time, the man, who listens filled with faith to this poem of my majesty, shall assuredly through my favour be delivered from every trouble, and be blessed with riches, grain and children.

From listening to this poem of my majesty moreover come splendid issues and prowess in battles, and a man becomes fearless.¹ When men listen to this poem of my majesty, enemies pass to destruction, and prosperity accrues and their family rejoices. Let a man listen to this poem of my majesty everywhere, at a ceremony for securing tranquillity, and after seeing an ill-dream and when planets are greatly eclipsed.

Thereby portents turn into calm, and also dreadful eclipses of the planets, and also an ill-dream which men have seen; and a sweet dream appears. It produces peacefulness in children who have been possessed by the demon that seizes children,² and it is the best promoter of friendship

1 The text as it stands is incorrect, for parākrama is masc., and parākra-mam, ca., has no verb. I have read therefore parākramaś ca for parākra mam ca. The Bombay edition reads tathopatīh pīthak śubhāh parakramāś ca, and the commentary translates the verse thus—"From listening to this poem of my majesty, and to my splendid diverse appearances in the forms of the Energies, and to my feats of prowess in battles, a man becomes fearless."

All this poem of my majesty brings a man near to me. And by means of cattle, flowers, arghya offerings and incenses, and by the finest perfumes and lamps, by feasts given to brāhmaṇas, by oblations, by sprinkled water day and night, and by various other objects of enjoyment, by gifts yearly—the favour which comes by such means, such favour is won from me when this story of my noble exploits is once heard. When heard it takes away sins and confers perfect health.

This celebration of me preserves created beings from future births, even this story of my exploits in battles, the annihilation of the wicked Daityas. When it is heard, no fear, that is caused by enmity, springs up among men. And the hymns which you have composed, and those composed by brāhmaṇa ṛṣis, and those composed by Brahmā bestow a splendid mind.³

Having spoken thus the adorable Caṇḍikā, who is fierce in prowess, vanished there, while the gods were gazing indeed on her. The gods also relieved from fear, their foes being slain, all resumed their own dominions as before, participating in their shares of sacrifices.

And the Daityas—when Śumbha, that most fierce foe of the gods, who brought ruin on the world and who was peerless in prowess, had been slain by the goddess in fight, and Niśumbha also great in valour was slain—all came to Pātāla. Thus that adorable goddess, although everlasting, yet taking birth again and again, accomplishes the safeguarding of the world, O king. By her this universe is bewitched; she verily gives birth to the universe. And when besought, she bestows knowledge; when gratified, she bestows prosperity.

The Devī-māhātmya (concluded)

After hearing this poem, king Su-ratha and the vaiśya practised austerities and worshipped the goddess.—Caṇḍikā appeared to them and gave the king the boon that he should be Manu Sāvarnī, in a future life, and bestowed knowledge on the vaiśya.

ऋषिरुवाच

तामुपैहि महाराज शरणं परमेश्वरीम्।
आराधिता सैव नृणां भोगस्वर्गापवर्गदा॥ ३॥

The ṛṣi spoke

I have now related to thee, O king, this sublime poem the Devī-māhātmya. Such majestic power has the goddess, by whom this world is upheld. Moreover knowledge is conferred by her who is the adorable Viṣṇu's Illusive power. By her you and this vaiśya and other men of discrimination, and celebrated men are bewitched; and others shall become bewitched. Go to her, the supreme queen, as to a place of refuge, O great king. She indeed, when propitiated by men, bestows enjoyment, Svarga and final emancipation from existence.

मार्कण्डेय उवाच

स च वैश्यस्तपस्तेपे देवीसूक्तं परं जपन्॥ ६॥

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

Having heard this his speech, king Su-ratha fell prostrate before the illustrious ṛṣi who performed severe penances, and being down-cast by his excessive regard for self and by the deprivation of his kingdom, went forthwith to perform austerities; and the vaiśya, O great muni, in order to get a vision of Ambā, took up his station on a sand-bank in a river; and the vaiśya practised austerities, muttering the sublime hymn to the goddess.

तौ तस्मिन् पुलिने देव्याः कृत्वा मूर्तिं महीमयीम्।
अर्हणां चक्रतुस्तस्याः पुष्पधूपान्गितर्पणैः॥ ७॥

एवं समाराधयतोस्त्रिभिवर्षेयतात्मनोः।
परितुष्टा जगद्धात्री प्रत्यक्षं प्राह चण्डिका॥ ९॥

They both made an earthen image of the goddess on that sand-bank, and paid worship to it with flowers, incense, fire and libations of water. Abstaining from food, restricting their food, concentrating their minds on her, keeping their thoughts composed, they both offered the bali offering also sprinkled with blood drawn from their own limbs. When they continued with subdued souls to propitiate her thus for three years, Caṇḍikā, who upholds the world, well-pleased spoke in visible shape.

श्रीदेव्युवाच

यत्प्रार्थ्यते त्वया भूय त्वया च कुलनन्दन।
मत्तस्तलाप्यतां सर्वं परितुष्टा ददामि तत्॥ १०॥

The goddess spoke

What you do solicit, O king, and you O rejoicer of your family, receive you all that from me; well-pleased I bestow it.

मार्कण्डेय उवाच

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

Then the king chose a kingdom that should not perish in another life, and in this life his own kingdom wherein the power of his enemies should be destroyed by force. Then the vaiśya also, whose mind was down-cast, chose knowledge,—to be wise, knowing ‘what is mine’, and ‘what I am’,—knowledge that causes the downfall of worldly attachments.

The goddess spoke

O king, you shall obtain thine own kingdom in a very few days, after slaying thine enemies; it shall be steadfast for you there; and when dead you shall gain another life from the god Vivasvat, and shall be a Manu on earth, by name Sāvāṛṇika. And O excellent vaiśya, I bestow on you the boon which you have besought of me; knowledge shall be thine to full perfection.

मार्कण्डेय उवाच

इति दत्त्वा तयोर्देवी यथाभिलषितं वरम्।

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

Having thus given them both the boon that each desired, the goddess vanished forthwith, while extolled by them both in faith.

Having thus gained the boom from the goddess, Su-ratha the noble kṣatriya shall obtain a new birth through the Sun, and shall be the Manu Sāvāṛṇi.

The Raucya and future Manvantaras.

Mārkaṇḍeya mentions briefly the succeeding Manus, the ninth to the thirteenth, and declares what shall be the names of the gods, ṛṣis and kings in their several periods.

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

I have duly declared to you this account of the Sāvāṛṇika Manv-antara, and also the Devī-māhātmya which tells of the slaughter of the Asura Mahiṣa. And the origins of the Mothers also which were from the goddess in the great battle, and the origin as well as the life of the goddess Cāmuṇḍā, and the majesty of Śiva-dūti, the slaying of Śumbha and Niśumbha, and the killing of Rakta-bija—all this has been narrated to you.

I tell you about that Manu, and who shall be the gods, the munis and the kings in his period. The Pāras and the Marīcis and the Bhargas and the Sudharmans shall be the gods; these shall be in threes; they shall be twelve groups in all; now their lord¹ shall be Sahasrākṣa, great in power.

Dhṛṣṭa-ketu, Varha-ketu, Pañca-hasta, Nirāmaya, Pṛthu-śravas, and Arciṣmat, Bhūri-dyumna, Vṛhad-bhaya—these shall be the royal sons of that son of Dakṣa, yea the kings.

As there shall be a hundred sons² of his, so shall there be a hundred gods then. And Śānti shall be the Indra, endowed with the Indra's good qualities.

4. This seems to be the meaning intended by the word mauhūrtaḥ; but the only meaning given in the dictionary is "astrologer"

5. Both editions read ṛṣir, but it can hardly be right, for it would be a proper name, and the number would then exceed seven. It seems to be a mistake for ṛṣir.

Sarvatra-ga and Suśarman, Devānika, Purūdvaha, Hema-dhanvan, and Dṛḍhāyu shall be the sons of that Manu, yea the kings

The Story of Ruci.

A Prajā-pati named Ruci formerly lived in solitary discomfort—His forefathers appeared to him and urged him to marry—He demurred and they insisted on the importance of marriage.

A Prajā-pati Ruci, who was devoid of self, free from pride, fearless and moderate in sleeping, formerly roamed this earth.

विमुक्तसङ्गं तं दृष्ट्वा प्रोचुस्तत्पितरो मुनिम्॥ २॥

Seeing that he was destitute of fire, had no habitation, that he ate but once a day, had no hermitage, and was cut off from all attachments, his ancestors spoke to him, the muni.

The Pitṛs spoke

Dear son, wherefore have you not done the sacred deed of taking a wife, since that is the cause of gaining Svarga and final emancipation from existence? without that there is bondage perpetually.

He apports the gods their share by uttering 'svāhā' aloud, the Pitṛs by uttering 'svadhā' aloud, created beings and others guests by the giving of food. Being such a negligent one, you do incur bondage by reason of the debt due to the gods, bondage by reason of the debt due to us also, bondage to men and created beings day by day, by not begetting sons, by not satisfying the gods and Pitṛs. And how, by not fulfilling these duties through folly, do you hope to go the good way?

क्लेशमेवैहिकं पुत्र मन्यामोऽत्र भवेत्तव।

आत्मा सद्वासनातोयैः प्रक्षाल्यो नियतेन्द्रियैः॥ १२॥

Ruci spoke

Wedlock tends to excessive suffering, and is a downward course toward sin; hence I took no wife hitherto. Control which is gained over one's self, this is effected by firm suppression;¹ it is the cause of final emancipation from existence; that emancipation verily comes not from wedlock. That the soul, though besmirched with the mire of selfishness, be washed clean day by day by those who have no family ties with the waters of thought—better verily is this! The soul, which is marked with the mire of actions that have developed during many existences, must be washed clean with the waters of good perceptions by wise men who keep their bodily organs under control.

पितर ऊचुः

युक्तं प्रक्षालनं कर्तुमात्मनो नियतेन्द्रियैः।

किन्तु लेपाय मार्गोऽयं यत्र त्वं पुत्र वर्तसे॥ १३॥

The Pitṛs spoke

Fitting it is that those who have their organs under control should cleanse their soul; but does this path, wherein you wend, O son, tend to final emancipation from existence?²

पञ्चर्णदीनैरशुभं नुद्यतेऽनभिसन्धितैः।

फलैस्तथोपभोगैश्च पूर्वकर्मशुभाशुभैः॥ १४॥

एवं न बन्धो भवति कुर्वतः कारणात्मकः।

पूर्वकर्म कृतं भोगैः क्षीयतेऽहर्निशं तथा।

सुखदुःखात्मकैर्वत्स पुण्यापुण्यात्मकैर्गुणाम्॥ १६॥

Moreover evil is driven away by means of disinterested³ gifts, and by results and enjoyments which are good or ill according to former actions. Thus no bondage befalls him who acts with a tender heart, and such action being disinterested

1. Ni-yantrana; a word not in the dictionary.

2. I take kintu as kim tu interrogatively; but the Bombay edition reads lepāya for mokṣāya and kintu then would mean simply "but"—"but this path, wherein, etc., tends to defilement."

3. An-abhisandhita; abhi-sandhita is not in the dictionary.

tends not to bondage. Thus a former action done, which consists of merit and demerit, is diminished day and night by enjoyments which consist of pleasure and pain, O son, among mankind.

एवं प्रक्षाल्यते प्राज्ञैरात्मा बन्धाच्च रक्ष्यते।

न त्वेवमविवेकेन पापपङ्केन लिप्यते॥ १७॥

Thus wise men cleanse their soul and guard it from bonds; thus, on the other hand, indiscrimination, which is the mire of sin, does not lay hold of it.

रुचिरुवाच

अविद्या पठ्यते वेदैः कर्ममार्गः पितामहाः।

तत्कथं कर्मणो मार्गं भवन्तो योजयन्ति माम्॥ १८॥

Ruci spoke

It is declared in the Veda, ignorance is the path of action, O my forefathers. How then do you, sirs, despatch me on the path of action?

पितर ऊचुः

प्रक्षालयामीति भवान्वसात्मानं तु मन्यते।

विहिताकरणोद्भूतैः पापैस्त्वं तु विलिप्यसे॥ २१॥

The Pitṛs spoke

Ignorance in very truth is this¹ action you mention—this maxim is not erroneous; nevertheless action is the cause undoubtedly of full acquisition of knowledge. On that view the restraint, which bad men observe because they do not perform what is enjoined, should tend ultimately to final emancipation from existence,² on the contrary it produces a downward course. But you think, O son, 'I will cleanse my soul'; yet you are burnt up by sins which arise from not performing what is enjoined.

अविद्याप्युपकाराय विषवज्जायते नृणाम्।

अनुष्ठिताभ्युपायेन बन्धायान्यायतो हि सा॥ २२॥

1. For cvaıt read cvaıtait.

2. The Bombay edition reads nāsau instead of so 'nte, and the meaning is "does not tend to final emancipation."

तस्माद्वत्स कुरुष्व त्वं विधिवद्दारसंग्रहम्।

मां जन्म विफलं तेऽस्तु असम्प्राप्य तु लौकिकम्॥ २३॥

Even Ignorance exists for the benefit of men, just as poison does; although it is different, it does not in truth tend to bondage³ by reason of the means which are put into practice. Therefore, O son, do you take a wife according to precept; let not your birth be unprofitable by your not observing the business of ordinary life fully.

रुचिरुवाच

वृद्धोऽहं साम्प्रतं को मे पितरः सम्प्रदास्यति।

पितर ऊचुः

3. The Bombay edition reads bandhāyānyā yato hi sā, "because it is different, it tends in truth to bondage." Or if anyā yato be read as one word a-nyāyato, it would mean "because of iniquity it tends in truth to bondagec."

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

The brāhmaṇa ṛṣi Ruci, being greatly agitated in mind at that his forefathers' counsel, wandered about the earth, desirous to find a maiden. Failing to obtain a maiden he, illuminated by the fire of his forefathers' counsel, fell into deep thought, while his mind was exceedingly agitated—"What can I do? Where am I going? How am I to take a wife? May that come to pass quickly, which will effect my forefathers' advancement!"

While the high-souled muni pondered thus, a thought occurred to him—"I will propitiate lotus-born Brahmā with austerities." Thereupon he performed austerities to Brahmā for a hundred celestial years, and for the purpose of propitiating him engaged then in the utmost self-mortification. Brahmā the forefather of the worlds thereupon showed himself and said to him—"I am well-pleased, declare your earnest wish."

He fell prostrate then before Brahmā, who is the origin of the world, and declared what he wished earnestly to do according to the counsel of his forefathers. And Brahmā hearing his earnest wish spoke to the brāhmaṇa Ruci.

Brahmā spoke

You shall be a Prajā-pati; you shall create human folk. After creating human folk, O brāhmaṇa, and begetting sons and performing ceremonies, you shall then, after your dominion shall be taken away, attain perfect felicity. Being such, do you take a wife as enjoined by your forefathers; and after reflecting on this desire, perform worship to the Pitṛs; those Pitṛs indeed being gratified shall bestow on you the wife and sons desired. When satisfied what may your ancestors not bestow?

The ṛṣi¹ on hearing this speech from Brahmā, whose birth is inscrutable, performed worship to the Pitṛs on a distant sand-bank in a river, and also gratified the Pitṛs, O brāhmaṇa, with these praises,

The bestowal of a boon by the Pitṛs in the Raucya Manv-antara.

A body of light appeared in the sky, and Ruci offered a hymn to all the deities and Pitṛs—The Pitṛs appeared, and to enable him to be a Prajāpati granted him the boon of a wife—They commend the hymn offered to them and declare its manifold efficacy.

Ruci spoke

I pay reverence² ever to those Pitṛs, who are honoured, incorporeal,³ luminously splendid, who are rapt in meditation, and who possess supernatural sight. And I pay reverence to those granters of men's desires, who are the leaders of Indra and the other gods, and of Dakṣa and Mārīca, of the seven ṛṣis and of other sages.

1. This word occurs twice, in verses 44 and 47. The Bombay edition reads the same. It seems to follow the Calcutta edition rather closely after the Devī-māhātmya.

2. Namasyāmi. It is used with the object in the genitive here and in verse 6; in the accusative in verses 4, 5, 7, 10 and 11; and in the dative in verses 8 and 9. The construction with the accusative is the only one mentioned in the dictionary.

3. Or, "Reverence to the seven classes of Pitṛs and to the seven worlds!"

I pay reverence moreover to the other Pitṛs who have the form of fire,⁴ because this universe is entirely composed of Agni and Soma. Now these who dwell in this light, and who have the bodies of the moon, sun and fire,⁵ and whose true nature is the world, and whose true nature is Brahmā⁶—to all those Pitṛs, practisers of religious devotion, I pay reverence with subdued mind, reverence, yea reverence. Of her was born to him a son, great in valour, great in intellect; he was named Raucya after his father's name; he was famous on this earth. CHAPTER 96

Eulogy of Agni

There was formerly a very irascible muni named Bhūti, to whom everything was subservient— He left his hermitage once and put his disciple Sānti in charge—The sacred fire went out, and Sānti in consternation offered up a long prayer and eulogy to Agni.

मार्कण्डेय उवाच

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

There was a disciple of Aṅgiras, by name Bhūti, very irascible, a muni who used to invoke bitter curses for a small matter, and who spoke harshly on the occasion of a transgression. At his hermitage Mātariśvan blew not very fiercely, the sun caused no excessive heat, nor Parjanya excessive mud, nor did the moon even when full cause excessive cold with its rays, through fear verily of that irascible and very glorious muni. And the seasons, abandoning their course, produced flowers and fruit at all times on the trees that grew in his hermitage according to his command. And the waters that flowed near his hermitage glided on according to his pleasure, and when taken into his water-pot were frightened at that high-souled muni. He was impatient of excessive trouble and was exceedingly irascible, O brāhmaṇa. And that illustrious muni having no son set his mind on austerities.

Desiring a son, restricting his food, exposing himself of cold, wind and fire, he fixed his mind on austerities indeed with the resolve, "I will practice austerities."

The moon did not tend to make him very cold, nor the sun to make him very hot, nor did Mātariśvan blow on him severely, O great muni. And Bhūti, best of munis, being greatly pained by the couples of opposite causes¹ did not obtain that desire and so ceased from his austerities. His brother was Suvarcas. Being invited by him to a sacrifice and being desirous of going, Bhūti said to his high-minded disciple named Sānti, who was calm, who had the measure of religious knowledge², who was well-behaved, always Zealous in the guru's business, observant of good customs, noble, an excellent muni.

Bhūti spoke

I shall go to the sacrifice of my brother Suvarcas, O Sānti, being summoned by him, and do you listen to what you must do here. You must keep watch over the fire in my hermitage thus and thus diligently, so that the fire may not become extinguished.

मार्कण्डेय उवाच

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

Having given this command and receiving the answer "Yea" from his disciple Sānti, the guru went to that his brother's sacrifice, being summoned thereto by his younger brother.

And while Sānti is fetching fuel, flowers, fruit and other things from the forest for that high-souled guru's maintenance, and is performing other business, being faithfully obedient to his guru, the fire which was the root of his welfare³ died out during that interval. Seeing the fire had died out, Sānti, sorely distressed and afraid of Bhūti, fell, though of great intellect, into manifold anxiety, thinking— "What am I to do? or how will the guru's return be? I must accomplish something now; what, when done, would be a good thing done? If my guru sees this extinguished fire occupying the hearth, he will assuredly devote me at once because of it to some grievous calamity. If I kindle another fire here in the fire-place, then he

I do not grieve so much for myself as for the sin committed against the guru. The guru on seeing the fire extinguished will certainly curse me, or Agni will be angry. That brāhmaṇa is truly of such immense power! With what fitness will not he, under whose command the gods live in terror of his majestic power, assail me who have committed sin!"

Tvam-a-vyayam bhimam a-śeṣa-lokam

Samūrtako hantya athavāti-vīryam which means unintelligible. The Bombay edition reads, -

Savardhakam hantya athavāti-vīryam and I have followed it except as regards the word savardhakam which seems incorrect. By comparing the two versions it, may be conjectured that the proper reading should be sam-mardakam, or sam-indhakam or some such word, and I have ventured to translate it by the general phrase, "who injures."

4 For pundarikas tvam the Bombay edition reads pundarika-sītham, which seems preferable who are zealously devoted to sacrificing, study the Vedāngas at all times. You are Brahmā who is devoted to sacrificing, and also Viṣṇu, goblin-ruling Siva, Indra lord of the gods, Aryaman, and water-dwelling Varuṇa. Both the sun and moon and all the gods and Asuras gratifying you with oblations obtain from you much-prized rewards. Everything, though corrupted with grave malady to the utmost degree, becomes pure when touched by your flames. Of ablutions the most excellent by far is that which is performed with ashes; therefore munis wait upon you pre-eminently at evening¹.

The Fourteen Manvantaras concluded.

Agni pleased with the hymn granted Sānti two boons; namely, the fire was re-kindled; and Bhūti obtained a son who will be the Manu Bhautya, and became gentle to all.—Agni also blessed the hymn.—The gods, ṛsis and kings in the Bhautya manvantara are named.—The merits obtained by hearing about the manv-antaras are proclaimed.

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

Being thus hymned by him the adorable fire thereupon appeared before him there, encircled with a halo of flame, O muni. And the god who abounds in light, pleased³ indeed with that hymn, O brāhmaṇa, spoke with a voice as deep as a thunder-cloud's to Sānti who fell prostrate before him.

1. The Bombay edition inserts a short verse here:—"After doing that, people, who have easy self-control, by means of real faith gain heaven which is sung of by multitudes."

2. For vaidyutādya the Bombay edition reads vaidyutābha, "who have a lightning-like splendour."

3. For prita-stotreṇa read pritaḥ stotreṇa?

Sānti spoke

O adorable god, I have accomplished my object inasmuch as I see you in bodily shape; nevertheless deign to hear me who bow to you in faith. My guru has gone from the hermitage to his brother's sacrifice, O god, and when he shall return to the hermitage may he see the sacrificial altar¹ with you for its master. The sacrificial altar that has been forsaken by you through my transgression, O Fire, may the brāhmaṇa see that now presided over by you as before! And if you show me grace in any other way, O god, then let my guru who is sonless obtain a distinguished son.

1. For dhiṣṭyam read dhiṣṇyam as in the Bombay edition, here and in the next verse and verse 21. In the next verse dhiṣṇya is treated as a neuter noun, but the dictionary gives dhiṣṇya, masc. only, this meaning.

2. or paśyatām read yaś ca tvām with the Bombay edition.

Inasmuch as you have asked, O brāhmaṇa, for two boons on your guru's behalf and not for yourself, therefore I am exceedingly pleased with you, O great muni. All this shall happen to your guru which you have prayed for—he shall be friendly to all beings and shall have a son. The son shall be the lord of a manv-antara, by name Bhautya, great in strength, great in valour; great in knowledge, O you who praises your guru.³

At sacrifices, on festival days, at places of pilgrimage, at sacrifices, at oblations to the gods, and at ceremonies let a man read this sublime hymn, which yields nourishment to me, to attain to righteousness. This sublime hymn, which yields pleasure to me, when heard once, O brāhmaṇa, shall without doubt destroy sin committed by day and night. This hymn when heard shall at once quell the faults and other defects that attend improper oblations and times, and the faults which are committed by unworthy men also who have made such mistakes. Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

Having spoken thus, adorable Agni became invisible forthwith, while he indeed looked on, O muni, just as the flame upon a lamp expires. And when Agni had departed, Sānti, with mind fully satisfied and with the hair of his body standing erect with gladness, entered the guru's hermitage. There he saw the fire blazing brightly on the guru's sacrificial altar as before; thereat he felt an intense joy.

At this moment the guru also of that high-souled disciple returned from his younger brother's sacrifice to his own hermitage; and before him the disciple paid respectful salutation to his feet. And the guru, after accepting the seat and worship offered, said to him then—"My son, I feel exceeding loving-kindness to you and to other creatures also. I do not know what this is; if you know, my son, tell this quickly to me." Thereupon the brāhmaṇa Sānti declares all that, namely, the extinction of the fire and the other incidents, to his teacher truly, O great muni. On hearing it the guru with eyes moist through affection embraced him, and gave the disciple the Vedas and Aṅgas and Upāṅgas, O great muni.

Hear from me of the gods, ṛṣis and kings in his manv-antara, namely, those who shall belong to that future Manu, while I declare them at length; and who shall be the lord of the gods in the time of that Manu famous for his deeds. Both the Cākṣuṣas and the Kaniṣṭhas, the Pavitras and the Bhrājiras, and the Dhārāvrikas—these shall be the five classes of gods according to tradition. Śuci shall be the Indra of those gods then, great in strength, great in valour endowed with all an Indra's qualities. And Agnidhara, and Agni-bāhu, Śuci and Mukta, Mādhava, Śukra and Ajita—these seven shall be the ṛṣis then according to tradition. Guru, Gabhira, and Bradhna, Bharata and Anugraha, and Strīmānin¹ and Pratiṛa, Viṣṇu and Saṅktandana,² Tejasvin and Subala—these shall be the Manu Bhautya's sons. I have declared this fourteenth manv-antara to you.

After hearing of the manv-antarās thus in order, O best of munis, a man obtains merit, and a diminished succession.¹

By listening to the first manvantara a man obtains righteousness. By listening to Svārociṣa's period he gains all his desires. He obtains wealth from listening to Auttami's story, and acquires knowledge in hearing the story of Tāmasa; and when Raivata is heard about, he finds intelligence and a handsome wife. Perfect health accrues to men when Cākṣuṣa is heard of, and strength when Vaivasvata is heard of, and virtuous sons and grandsons when the Sun's son Sāvāṛṇika is heard of. A man obtains greatness of soul when Brahma-Sāvāṛṇa is heard of, a bright intellect when Dharma-Sāvāṛṇika is heard of, victory when Rudra-Sāvāṛṇika is heard of. A man becomes the chief of his kindred and is endowed with good qualities, when Dakṣa-Sāvāṛṇika is heard of; he makes his enemies power small² after hearing of Raucya, O best of men.

He acquires the favour of the gods when the Bhautya manv-antara is heard of, and also obtains the sacred fire and sons endowed with good qualities. And whoever listens to all the manv-antarās in regular order, O best of munis, hearken to his supreme reward also. After hearing of the gods, ṛṣis Indras, Manus, their sons the kings, and their genealogies therein, he is delivered from all his sins.

And the other gods, ṛṣis, Indras and kings who rule over those manv-antarās are pleased with him, and when pleased they bestow a bright intellect. Having obtained then a bright intellect and having performed a splendid deed, he attains a splendid course as long as the fourteen Indras continue.³ May all the seasons be salubrious; may all the planets be benign! Assuredly they are so, when he has listened to the ordinance of the manvantaras in their order.

These three mystic words therefore express the essential property of the Sun. Now from this essential property indicated by "Om" comes the subtle sublime form of the Sun. Next there issued the gross Mahar-loka, then the grosser Jana-loka, then the Tapo-loka, then the Styā-loka;—these are the seven-fold substantial forms, His permanent forms exist and do not exist, inasmuch as they assuredly come into existence in innate disposition and in feeling.²

8. Sukha-sattva-tamaḥ-prāyam; sukha is peculiar in this connexion.

1. The Svar-loka.

2. Svabhāva-bhāvayor bhāvam yato gacchanti samsayam. The Bombay edition reads the same, but it seems obscure. I have ventured to read gacc hyanty a samsayam instead.

The R̥k hymns have the quality of passion; and goodness is the quality¹ of the Yajus hymns, O muni; the Sāman hymns have the quality of darkness; darkness and goodness exist in the Atharvan hymns. These emanations, blazing indeed with unrivalled glory, obtained each a separate station almost at first.²

That then was the original glory which is declared³ by uttering the word “Om”. The glory which comes from the essential nature thereof—that, having encompassed it completely remains fixed. As is the glory which consists of the Yajus, such is that of the Sāmans, O great muni; they have grown into one in resorting to a supreme glory. Rites for the removal of calamities, and rites for promoting growth and magical rites also—three things gained union⁴ with the three Vedas, the R̥c and the two others, O brāhmaṇa.

2. Pūrvam iva.
3. Abhi-śabdyate; abhi-śabd as a verb is not in the dictionary.
4. Layam agamat. The reference seems to be to the Atharva-Veda; see verse 5 where these rites are said to be part of that Veda. This passage then refers to the changes by which that work gained rank as a Veda. But these words may also mean “became blended with the three Vedas;” see verse 17 below.

The triple Veda, which is named the R̥c, Yajus and Sāman, gives warmth in the morning and at mid-day and in the afternoon also. The R̥c hymns give warmth in the forenoon, and the Yajus hymns truly at mid-day, and the Sāman hymns give warmth truly in the afternoon, O best of munis.

Rites for the removal of calamities are deposited⁵ in the R̥c hymns in the forenoon, rites for promoting internal growth in the Yajus hymns at mid-day, and magical rites lastly in the Sāman at evening. Magical rites moreover should be performed at mid-day and in the afternoon equally, but the particular ceremonies for the Pitr̥is should be performed with the Sāman in the afternoon.

In the creation of the world is manifested Brahmā, who is composed of the R̥k hymns; in its permanence Viṣṇu who is composed of the Yajus hymns; and Siva, who is composed of the Sāman, at the dissolution; therefore its sound is impure.¹ Thus the adorable Sun, whose self is the Veda, who abides in the Veda and whose self is Vedic knowledge, is called the Supreme Soul.² And he, the eternal, who is the cause of creation, permanence and dissolution, on taking recourse to passion, goodness and the other qualities, acquires the names of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and the other gods.

Now ever to be praised by the gods is he whose body is the Veda,

Yet who has no body, who was in the beginning, who is embodied in all mortals;

Who is the Light that is the refuge of the universes, who has righteousness that passes knowledge,

Who is to be attained to in the Vedānta, supreme beyond things that are sublime!

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

Now when the egg was being heated by his glory above and beneath, the lotus-born Forefather, being desirous of creating, pondered—"My creation although accomplished will assuredly pass to destruction through the intense glory³ of the Sun, who is the cause of creation, dissolution and permanence, great of soul. Breathing beings will all be bereft of breath, the waters will dry up through his glory, and without water there will be no creation of this universe." Pondering thus the adorable Brahmā, Forefather of the world, becoming intent thereon, composed a hymn to the adorable Sun.

Praise of the Sun

Brahmā finished the creation—He had a son Marīci, who had a son Kaśyapa—Kaśyapa married Dakṣa's thirteen daughters, and begot by them the gods, demons, mankind, animals, birds etc.,—The gods were subdued by the demons, and Aditi offered a hymn to the Sun, imploring his help.

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

Having created this world, Brahmā then separated off the castes, the brāhmaṇa's four periods of life, the seas, the mountains, and the islands even as before. The adorable lotus-born god fixed the forms and abodes of the gods, Daityas, Nāgas and other beings, as before, according to the Vedas¹ indeed.

And Vinatā bore Garuḍa and Aruṇa; Khasā the Yakṣas and Rākṣasas indeed; and Kadru bore the Nāgas; Muni bore the Gandharvas; from Krodhā were born the Kulyas; and from Riṣṭā the bevvies of Apsarasas; and Irā bore Airāvata and other elephants, O dvija; and Tāmra bore daughters of whom Śyenī was the chief, O dvija, from all of whom were born the hawks, vultures, parrots and other birds; from Ilā were born the trees; from Pradhā the various kinds of aquatic animals.³

The chief of those sons of Kaśyapa are the hosts of gods. Now these hosts are characterized by goodness, by passion and by ignorance, O muni. Brahmā, the chief of those learned in sacred lore, the highest of all, the Prajā-pati, made the gods participators in the sacrifices, and rulers over the three worlds. The hostile Daityas and Danavas and Rākṣasas combining harassed them, and a very terrible war occurred between them. Now the deities were vanquished for a thousand divine years, and the powerful Daityas and Dānavas were victorious, O brāhmaṇa. Then Aditi, seeing her sons cast out and robbed of the three worlds by the Daityas and Dānavas, O best of munis and deprived of their shares of sacrifices, was exceedingly afflicted with grief, and made the utmost efforts to propitiate the Sun. Concentrating her mind thereon, restricting her food, observing the utmost self-repression, she hymned the Sun, the ball of light that dwells in the sky.

2. Martyāḥ, the reading of the Bombay edition. The Calcutta edition reads instead yoga-mūrtyā, "by means of the body which belongs to religious devotion;" but this violates the metre.
3. Hrādayasi in both editions. The meaning is no doubt "to shout for joy;" see the Bible, Psalm lxx. 9-13.
4. The Bombay edition reads the second half of this verse very differently—"Thou the lotus-born god createst it; you who are named the Unwavering one protectest it, and you destroyest it at the end of the age. You alone are awful in form!"

CHAPTER 102

The Birth of Mārtaṇḍa

The Sun revealed himself to Aditi and became her son as Mārtaṇḍa— This name is explained— Mārtaṇḍa destroyed the demons and restored the gods to their sovereign positions.

Thereupon from out of that his own glory the Sun revealed⁵ himself; the lord, the Sun, appeared then, like to glowing copper. And the luminous one spoke, O muni, to the goddess, who fell prostrate when she beheld him— "Choose from me the coveted boon that you desire." And she, lying prostrate with her head on the ground and pressing the earth with her knees, answered the Sun who present in his very person offered her a boon:— "O god! be gracious; the three worlds have been snatched⁶ from my sons, and the shares in sacrifices also, by both the Daityas and the Dānavas who excel them in strength. Do you, O lord of the heavenly cattle, bestow on me favour for that purpose; with a portion of yourself enter you into brotherhood with them and destroy their enemies. In order that my sons may again partake of the shares of the sacrifices, O lord, and may become rulers of the three worlds, O Sun, do you then most graciously show compassion¹ on my sons, O Sun, who removes the afflictions of suppliants; you are called the Author of permanence.”

Thereupon the adorable lord, the Sun, the robber of the waters, spoke to prostrate Aditi, O brāhmaṇa, while his countenance was benign with favour²—“Taking birth in your womb with all my thousand portions, I will speedily destroy the foes of your sons, O Aditi, in security.³

Being pure she conceived him, knowing that the embryo was a heavenly one, O brāhmaṇa. Then spoke Kaśyapa to her with words somewhat confused through anger,—“Why do you destroy the egg in your womb by continual fasting?” And she said to him, “See you this egg within my womb, O wrathful man? The gods hearing this speech from heaven assembled together, and experienced unparalleled joy; and the Dānavas were bereft of their vigour. Thereupon Indra challenged the Daityas to battle; and the Dānavas filled with joy encountered the gods. Terrible was the battle of the gods with the Asuras, wherein all the regions between the worlds were rendered brilliant with the light from the arms and weapons. In that battle the adorable Mārtaṇḍa looked at those great Asuras, and being burnt up by his splendour they were reduced to ashes. Thereupon all the dwellers in heaven experienced unparalleled joy, and praised Mārtaṇḍa the source of splendour and also Aditi; moreover they regained their own spheres of dominion and their shares of the sacrifices as before; and the adorable, Mārtaṇḍa also exercised his own dominion. Like to a rounded ball of fire with rays shooting out both downward and upward like a globular flower-head of the kadamba, the Sun assumed a body that did not flash over-poweringly.

The paring down of the Sun's body

The Sun married Viśva-karman's daughter Sañjñā and had three children by her, Manu vaivasvata, Yama and Yamunā—Sañjñā could not endure the Sun's glory and leaving her shadow Chāyā departed—Chāyā—Sañjñā took her place and had three children by the Sun—She cursed Yama for unfilial conduct, but the Sun minimised the curse and perceived the deception.—The Sun visited Viśva-karman and the latter placing the Sun on his wheel pared down his glory—The world was thrown into chaos as the Sun was whirled around—The gods and celestial beings hymned the Sun.

Now the Prajā-pati Viśva-karman, after falling prostrate and propitiating him, gave his daughter named Sañjñā to the Sun, Vivasvat¹. Manu Vaivasvata was begotten by Vivasvat of her then, and his nature has been already indeed declared particularly.² He, Vivasvat, lord of the heavenly cattle, begot three children of her, two most illustrious sons and a daughter Yamunā, O muni. Manu Vaivasvata was the eldest, the god who presides over śrāddhas, the Prajā-pati; then were born Yama and Yami as twins. With the exceeding splendour that Mārtaṇḍa Vivasvat possessed, he scorched the three worlds and the moveable and immovable things therein very grievously. But Sañjñā saw Vivasvat's globe-like form and, being impatient of his great splendour, gazed at her own shadow Chāyā and spoke:—

Fare you well! I will go to my father's very own abode. Yet you must stay here without change at my command, O fair one; and you must show honour to these two boys for me and to this daughter who is of noble rank; and you must not declare this at all to the god.

There, like a chaste wife, she practised austerities, fasting, O great muni. When Sañjñā had gone to her father, Chāyā, assiduous to Sañjñā's command, and assuming her form, waited on the Sun; and the adorable Sun begot of her, he thinking it was of Sañjñā, two sons in addition and a daughter. The first born of the two sons was equal to the eldest son Manu, hence he was called Sāvārṇi, O best of dvijas. And the other, who was the second son, became the planet Saturn.

Chāyā did not behave to those eldest born sons with such affection. Manu suffered that conduct in her, and Yama did not suffer it in her. Now being sorely distressed when his father's wife used to beseech him frequently, he Yama, by reason of both anger and childishness and indeed by the force of predestination, threatened Chāyā-Sañjñā with his foot, O muni, and thereupon the Shadow-Sañjñā,¹ full of resentment, cursed Yama severely.

Without doubt, my son, this curse must take effect here, since anger entered into you, who are wise in righteousness and who speaks truth. This your mother's word then cannot be made false; I will however devise something as a favour for you, because of my love for you my son. Then the bands of Vidyādhara and the Yakṣas, Rākṣasas and Nāgas joining their hands reverently all fell prostrate with their heads before the Sun, and uttered words such as these, giving joy to his mind and ears,—“May your glory become enduring to created beings, O you who cause created beings to exist!”

Then all the gods, joining their hands reverently, and bowing their bodies in faith, prostrated themselves before the Thousand-rayed god as he was being pared down. In that resounding noise, where all the gods were gathered together, Viśva-karman then gradually diminished his glory.

While he was thus hymning the Sun Viśva-karman kept intact in spherical shape the sixteenth part of the glory of the lord of heaven; and when fifteen parts of his glory had been pared away, the Sun's body was exceedingly beautiful and charming then. And with the splendour that was pared away from him was fashioned Viṣṇu's discus; and Siva's trident, and Kuvera's palki, the rod of the lord of the dead, and the spear of the gods' general. And Viśva-karman made the brilliant weapons of the other gods with the Sun's splendour for the quelling of their foes. He whose splendour had been thus pared down shone with no excessive splendour. Mārtaṇḍa retained a body resplendent in every limb.

Concentrating his thoughts he beheld his wife in the form of a mare, unassailable by all created beings by reason of her austerities and self-repression. And going to the Northern Kurus, the Sun became a horse and approached her. And she, beholding him approaching, because of her fear of a strange male, went face to face with him, being intent on guarding her rear. And thereupon they joined their noses, when they both met there, and his glory passed from the Sun's two nostrils¹ into the mare. Two gods were begotten there, the two Aśvins, who are the two best physicians, namely Nāsātya and Dasra, the sons who issued forth from the mare's² mouth; these two are indeed the sons of Mārtaṇḍa while he bore a horse's form. And at the termination of the flow of his semen was born Revanta, holding a sword and bow, clad in armour, riding on horseback, and carrying arrows and a quiver.

Then the Sun revealed his own unsullied form. She perceiving his form was mild felt a joy, and the Sun, the robber of the waters, led to his own home this his wife Sañjñā, changed again into her own form and full of love. After that he who was her firstborn son became Manu Vaivasvata.

Mārkaṇḍeya tells the story of king Rājya-varḍhana.—After the king had reigned many years, his queen sorrowed over finding a grey hair in his head—He comforted her and resolved to depart to the forest—His vassals and subjects tried to dissuade him and in vain—They performed many austerities in order to propitiate the Sun and went to Kāma-rūpa and continued their worship—At length the Sun appeared to them in bodily shape.

Now the realm, being protected by that high-souled monarch in righteousness, increased day by day in people and wealth, O brāhmaṇa. And joyous and thriving exceedingly were all the subordinate kings on the earth without exception, while he was king; and so also were his people, both town and country folk. No portent visited them, nor sickness, nor the fear that comes from serpents, nor was there fear of drought there, while Dama's son was king. And he offered up great sacrifices, and gave gifts to those who asked; he enjoyed even the pleasures of sense without hindrance to true righteousness.

When her tear-drops fell on the king's body, he saw Mānini was of tearful countenance then and questioned her.

The king questioned her again.² And after the king had questioned her often, she, the slender-waisted lady, showed him a grey hair growing among his abundant locks. "Look at this, O king; is this a cause of vexation to me, most luckless that I am?" And the king laughed thereat.

What else is there which I have not done, that you are frightened at grey hairs, O lady? Let my hair become grey; let wrinkles come to me, O beauteous one; let my body pass into weakness; for I have been successful, O Mānini! Because you have shown me a grey hair on my head, O lady, here then I take medical treatment therefore through resorting to the forest. First in childhood there is childhood's action; similarly there is action which is natural in youth; and also such as is fitting in early manhood; in old age there is resort to the forest. Since those who lived before me did so, lady, and also those who lived before them, I see no reason whatever then for you to shed tears. Away with your vexation! Does not the sight of this grey hair cause me elevation? Weep not; it is futile."

Then the kings and citizens who were in his presence did him reverence, and the kings addressed Rājya-var dhana with conciliatory words, O great ṛṣi:—“It is not for you to weep with this your wife, O king; it is we who must weep here, or rather all living beings. Since you, O master, speak the word indicating that you will dwell in the forest, life falls therefore from us who have been tenderly cherished by you, O king. We will all go, O king, if you go to the forest. All the inhabitants of the earth will thereby suffer loss in all their ceremonies without doubt, when you, O master, shall take up your abode in the forest; and if that loss tends to injure righteousness, let that course be discarded. Seven thousand years this earth has been guarded by you; have regard, O king, to the great merit that has accrued therefrom! The austerities, which you, O great king, wilt perform while dwelling in the forest, are not worth¹ the sixteenth part of this your guardianship over the earth!”

Being desirous of departing to the forest the king then enquired of the astrologers about the best days and moments for anointing his son in the kingdom. While they took counsel, O brāhmaṇa, this resolution developed there among those who were devotedly attached to that most righteous king--'Giving ourselves over absolutely to deep meditation, we will with composed minds propitiate the Sun with austerities and beseech him for this king's life.'

Even thus, applying themselves to those several rites, did they work in manifold ways with exceeding determination in order to propitiate the Sun.

Those brāhmaṇa folk bowing in faith then prostrated themselves before the Sun, who is without beginning, as he manifested himself in bodily shape, while they quivered with thrills of awe; exclaiming "Reverence, reverence be to you, the thousand-rayed one! The Majesty of the Sun, concluded.

King Rājya-varḍhana's subjects besought of the Sun that the king might reign ten thousand years more, and the Sun granted it—But the king, distressed that the boon did not include all his family and subjects, went and propitiated the Sun, and at length gained his desire—This story is commented on and its merits are extolled.

Such power has the adorable Sun, who is without beginning and without end, concerning whose majesty you, O Kraustuki, do ask me in faith He is the Supreme Soul among religious devotees who meditate deeply on the dissolution of heir intellects,⁴ he is the Conscious Soul among those who apply the Sāṅkhya doctrine to the knowledge of spirit, and he is the lord of sacrifice among those who are sacrificers⁵ While Viṣṇu Siva and Brahmā each supports the Sun's supremacy Manu was his son, a solver of doubts in all matters, the ruler of a manv-antara, whose is the seventh period, O brāhmana Ikṣvāku, Nābhaga and Rista—who were great in strength and prowess—and Narisyanta, Nābhāga, Pūsadhra and Dhṛsta,⁶ these were that Manu's sons, each

4 This is the best meaning that I can get out of the text—Paramātmā sa yuginām yuñjatām cetasām layam which is the reading in the Calcutta Bombay and Poona editions, though the last in its corrigenda alters it to yuginam and then sa yogānām must be read as one word sa-yoganām But the text is no doubt corrupt yuginam should be yuginam and yuñjatām should perhaps be yuñjānānām, though both Paraśmi-pada and Atmanepada have the meaning “to meditate deeply Mahāmahopādhyāya Hara Prasad Sāstrī suggests also that layah would be better than layam and would translate thus, “He is the Supreme Soul to those who are successful in meditation [i.e. the Vedāntists], he is that in which the minds of those who are engaged in meditation, but who are not yet successful, are absorbed” [i.e. the Saguna Brahman of the Vedāntists]

5 Yajñeṣo yajvinām api, but yajvanām must be read for yajvinām, and Mahāmahopādhyāya Hara Prasad Sāstrī gives it the meaning “to those who consider sacrifices to be the means leading to beatitude” [i.e. the Mimāṃsists]

6 Only seven sons are mentioned here The number is generally given as ten There is much diversity regarding the guardian of a separate kingdom All were celebrated in fame, all had the utmost skill in arms and weapons Seeking yet again for a son who should be more distinguished,

The second and third names Nābhaga and Rīṣṭa are sometimes given as a single name, Nābhāgadīṣṭa in the Veda and Nābhānedīṣṭha in the Āitareya Brāhmana, and the last-named book says—he was given to sacred study his brothers deprived him of his share in the paternal property, and referred him to their father, and by his father's advice he helped the Aṅgīrasas in their sacrificial session and obtained great wealth (V ii 14)

moreover when the offering was perversely made through the improper conduct¹ of the priest, O great muni, a daughter was born to Manu named Ilā, slender of waist. On seeing that daughter born there, Manu offered praise to Mitra and Varuna then and spoke this word,—“When I made the sacrifice with the prayer, ‘Through your favour may I obtain a distinguished son,’ a daughter was born to me who am wise. If ye being gracious grant me a boon, then let this my daughter, through the favour of you both, become a son endowed with surpassing virtues!” And when these two gods in sooth said, “Be it so!” that same daughter Ilā become forthwith a son famed by the name Su-dyumna. And afterwards that wise son of Manu, while roving the forest a-hunting, was turned into a woman through the wrath of the god;² in which condition Soma's son Budha begat of her a son named Pururavas,³ who was a mighty universal monarch. When that son was born, Su-dyumna again performed a great horse-sacrifice and regained a man's nature and became a king Su-dyumna during his manhood had three sons, Utkala,⁴ Vinaya⁵ and Gaya,⁶ who were most valiant, given to sacrificing, great in bodily strength. Now those three sons, who were born to him during his manhood, enjoyed this earth⁷ while governing their minds in righteousness. But Purūravas, who was born of that monarch Su-dyumna.

Those who treat gurus⁵ with respect should consult their gurus⁶ in all things that must be done; but not in such things as this, things which are not to be done,⁷ do the words of gurus have scope. What has Love's conversation to do with listening to gurus? This is incompatible. In other things, men should consult their gurus.

Nābhāga’s exploits

Nābhāga married the vaiśya maiden and became a vaiśya—He had a son Bhanandana, who with the help of the ṛṣi Nīpa conquered the earth and offered the sovereignty to his father Nābhāga—Nābhāga declined it as he was a vaiśya, and his wife Su-prabhā then explained to him, that she was not really of vaiśya descent, but the daughter of king Su-deva who became a vaiśya under the ṛṣi Pramati’s curse, because he would not rescue Pramati’s wife from his own friend Nala.

Hear also, illustrious sir, all the story³ who I am. There was of yore a royal ṛṣi named Su-ratha on mount Gandhmādana, who practised austerities, restricted his food, abandoned worldly associations, and abode in the forest. On his seeing then a mainā⁴ fallen from a hawk's beak to the ground, compassion sprang up within that high-souled ṛṣi, and he swooned therewith; then when the swoon passed off, I was produced from his body, and seeing me he took me with a loving mind. "Because she has been born from me, while I was overcome with compassion, she shall therefore be known by the name Kṛpā-vati"⁵—so said he, my lord. Thereafter growing up in his hermitage, I used to wander day and night through the woods also with my girl-companions of the same age. Then the muni Agastya's brother, who was known as Agastya,⁶ while seeking for forest-products in the forest, was angered by my girl-companions and cursed me; and I said—"No offence have I committed against you, O best of

The Exploits of Bhananda and Vatsa-prī.

Nābhāga declined the kingdom and Bhanandana became king—He had a son Vatsapri—A Daitya king Kujrmbha, who had a magic club called Sunanda, opened a great hole near king Vidūratha's city and carried the princess Mudārati down to Pātāla—Her brother failed to rescue her and were made captive—Vatsa-prī killed the Daitya, after she destroyed the club's magic power, and rescued her and her brothers—She was named Sunandā after the club, and Vatsa-pri married her.

The ṛṣi spoke

“Don’t you know it, O king? for you are deemed by me to have spies as thine eyes.¹ A king ought to know everything that passes on the face of the earth. A very valiant fierce Dānava dwells in Rasātala; because he makes the earth to yawn,² he is therefore called Ku-jṛmbha. Whatever has been produced, whether produced on the earth or in heaven, is wrought by him, O king; how is it then that you do not know him, Sir? That wicked-souled demon carried off the club named Sunanda, which Tvastā fashioned of yore; there with he slays his enemies in battle. Hidden within Pātāla that Asura cleaves this earth with it, and makes door of exit for all the Asuras; with that weapon, the club Su-nanda, the earth has been pierced in this spot. How shall you, Sir, enjoy this earth unless you conquer him? That fierce, mighty adversary of the gods, armed with the club, destroys sacrifices and fattens up the Daityas. If you slay this foe, whose sphere is in Pātāla, you shall thereby become lord of all the earth, the supreme monarch. That mighty demon’s club is called Saunanda by men-folk; and the wise moreover speak of it³ as partly strong and partly weak; yet when touched by a woman it loses its power on that day,⁴ O king; on the following day it issues forth with its power regained. That demon of evil ways does not know then the majestic power of the club, nor the defect which comes at the touch of a woman’s fingers, that is, the collapse of its power.

Hearing the sound of the bow-string, the Dānava king, Kujrmbha came forward then in excessive wrath, attended by his army. Then occurred a battle between him and the king's son, one with his army against the other with his army, mighty against mighty. When the Dānava had fought with him for three days, he was filled with rage in his soul and rushed to get his club. Worshipped with perfumes, garlands and incense, it stands in the private apartments, O illustrious sir; for it had been fashioned by the Prajā-pati:¹ Mudā-vatī, who knew well the secret of the club's majestic power, bowing her neck very low, touched the noble club then. Until the great demon grasps the club again, till then the beautiful maiden touched it many times under pretence of paying reverence to it. Going back then the king of the demons fought with the club. Vainly fell the blows of the club on those enemies. But inasmuch as the supreme weapon, the club Saunanda, had lost its power, O muni, the Daitya fought with his weapons and arms against his foe in the battle.

With his arms and weapons the demon was not the prince's equal, and that, his might with the club, had been dissipated by the maiden.² Conquering then the Dānava's weapons and arms, the king's son forthwith forced him from his chariot; and then the demon grasping his shield and scimitar rushed at him again. The prince felled that enemy of the lord of the thirty gods, as he rushed forwards violently incited and displaying his rage,—felled him to the earth with his weapon of fire which gleamed like the Fire that burns up the world finally. That foe of the thirty gods was wounded grievously in the heart by the fiery weapon and quitted his body. And forthwith there was high festival among the huge snakes within the confines of Rasātala.

Now the people, being protected by that high-souled monarch as if they were his children, prospered, and in his realm there was no confusion among the castes, and no one felt any fear of robbers, rogues or villains, nor any fear of calamities, while he ruled as king.

Khanitra's exploits.

Vatsa-pī was succeeded by his son Prāmsū, and Prāmsū by his son prajāti—prajāti had five sons of whom Khanitra succeeded him—Khanitra's special prayer is given. He made his four brothers subordinate kings—The minister of one of them subdued the other brothers and tried to gain the supreme power for his master through magic performed by the family priests of all four brothers. The magic produced a female deity which destroyed the four priests and the minister.

Such was that king's son Khanitra in disposition; he was endowed with every good quality; he possessed good fortune, his eyes were like a lotus-leaf. He appointed those his fore brothers to separate kingdoms out of affection, and he himself enjoyed this earth bounded by the seas; thus he placed Sauri over the east region, Mudāvasu¹ over the south, Sunaya over the western region, and Mahā-ratha over the northern. They and that king had separate families of brāhmanas as purohitas, and also munis, who descended in a regular lineage of ministers. Sauri's purohita was a brāhmaṇa² Su-hotra by name who sprang from the family of Atri; Udāvasu's was Kusāvartta, who was born of the lineage of Gautama; a Kāśyapa by name Pra-mati was Sunaya's purohita; Vāsiṣṭha was purohita to king Mahā-ratha. Those four kings indeed enjoyed their own kingdoms, and Khanitra was their over-lord, being over-lord of all the earth. King Khanitra was always kindly to those his four brothers and to all his people as to his own sons. One day Sauri was addressed by his minister Viśva-vedin- "O king, we have somewhat to say to you in private. He, who possesses all this earth, to whom all kings are in subjection, is the king, and so will be his son and his grandsons and thereafter his descendants. Next he employed them in spells directed against Khanitra, and severed his faithful adherents by conciliation, gifts and other means; and he exerted the utmost efforts in repelling punishment from his own folk. And while the four purohitas were performing and exceedingly arduous magical incantation day by day, there was produced a four-fold female deity³ which was very formidable, had a large mouth,

The four-fold female deity fell on those evil-souled purohitas of his brother kings, and on Viśva-vedin indeed. Then were burnt up by that female deity, who assailed them, those purohitas and Viśva-vedin the minister who gave evil counsel to Sauri.

Thereupon there was great dismay in all the world, inasmuch as those purohitas dwelling in separate cities perished at the same time. Khanitra heard then that his brothers' purohitas had reached their death, and that his brother's minister Viśva-vedin also had been burnt up. Khanitra the great king was extremely surprised, wondering "What is this?" O best of munis; and knew not the cause. Then the king asked Vasiṣṭha who had come to his palace, what the reason was why those, the minister and purohitas of his brothers, had perished. When questioned by him the great muni related then how it had happened, what Sauri's minister had said and what Sauri had replied to him, and what he, that evil minister, had performed as a means of producing dissension among the brothers and what the purohitas had done; for what reason they, the purohitas who were absolutely compassionate even to any enemy, had perished, while injuring that sinless king. On hearing that, the king reproached himself exceedingly then, exclaiming, "Alas! I am sore stricken!" in Vasiṣṭha's presence, O dvija.

Going there he, best of kings, being well-versed in the ordinances concerning vānaprasthas, performed austerities three hundred and fifty years. Now, when his body had become emaciated through austerities, the noble king, having restrained all the organs of sense, quitted his life while dwelling in the forest, O chief of brāhmanas. 3 Go brahmanan The compound occurs again in verses 10 and 12 It does not seem to mean “cattle and brāhmanas,” for this meaning hardly suits the verb used, and the compound occurs twice in the singular in verse 12 In that verse the Poona edition varies in reading go-brāhmanāh, plural but both editions agree in reading go-brāhmanāya, singular

Vivimśa was succeeded by his son Khanīetra, who was a great sacrificer— Being son-less he went hunting to kill a deer for a sacrifice, and two deer came, one having no offspring and the other many— Each pressed his claim to be killed, but the king refused to kill either.

His son was Khanīetra, great in strength and prowess, at whose sacrifices sang the Gandharvas, filled with astonishment, thus—“Like Khanīetra there will be no other sacrificer on earth.” After completing ten thousand sacrifices, he gave the earth with its seas away. And he it was who, after giving away all the earth to high-souled brāhmaṇas, acquired wealth through austerities fully performed, and lavished that also;³ and after obtaining unparalleled increase of riches from that most noble giver, brāhmaṇas accepted no donation from any other king, O brāhmaṇa:—he it was who sacrificed sixty-seven thousand and sixty-seven hundred and sixty-seven sacrifices with abundance of largesse.

His son Avikṣita learnt the whole of the Vedas and Vedāṅgas. He acquired too from Kaṇva's son perfect skill in every weapon. Thus were prepared for battle those kings and princes, who had been beaten off repeatedly and yet were not destroyed² at that time. Then began a terrible battle between him and them, between the prince single-handed and many kings and noble princes, O muni. In great ferocity they fought, assailing him with their swords, spears, clubs, arrows, and hands; and he fought with them all.

The prince mighty and skilled in weapons pierced them with hundreds of fierce arrows; and they pierced him with sharp arrows. He cut off the arm of one, and the neck of another; and pierced another in the heart, and smote another in the breast. He cut off the trunk of an elephant and the head of a horse, and wounded the horses of the chariot of these foes,³ and the driver of the chariot of another.

Deeply angered by this and that foe, he great in his strength, set himself to cleave asunder their harness and armour¹ also, and enraged thereat, O great muni, those princes forsaking the code of Right² all together fought with him, who continued to fight according to the code of Right, while their faces were wet with drops of perspiration. Once pierced him with multitudes of arrows, another split his bow, another splitting his banner with arrows, laid it low on the ground. Moreover, others smote his horses, and others broke his chariot, and others besides smote³ his back with blows of their clubs and with arrows, When his bow was split, the king's son enraged the utmost of thy power, with thy full effort, conducting thyself according to the conduct of good men. You shall gain from Dhananjaya the worlds which are won by the righteousness of ksatriyas' (ksātra-dharma). Fight without arrogance, relying on thy strength and valour, for there is nought better for a ksatriya than righteously conducted battle' (dharma yuddha M-Bh., Bhīṣma-p cxxiv 5851-4). Again, Soma-datta said to Sātyaki,—"How is it that you O Sattvata have forsaken the righteousness of ksatriyas, which was seen of old by the high-souled gods, and delightest in the righteousness of Dasyus? At one who has turned to flee, at one in distress, at one who has laid down his arms, at one who begs for quarter—how indeed did a wise man, who delights in the righteousness of ksatriyas, even strike at such a one in battle?" (Drona p. clvi 6730 l). The matter is summed up by Karma thus. This, we have heard, is a ksatriya's chiefest righteousness (dharma), that he lie, slain in battle highly honoured by the good" (Karma-p xl 1858-9).

Many maidens³ presented for their svayamvara have been seized by my son in full sight of exceedingly proud kings. When all that confederacy of kings was almost defeated,² Viśāla with arghya offering in hand approached Karandhama then. And that king highly honoured Karandhama with kindly feeling. On his son being set free,³ he abode there that night in happiness. And when Viśāla taking the maiden came near, Avikṣit spoke before his father touching the marriage, O bramarsi: – “O king, I will not take this maiden, nor any other woman, in whose very sight I have been vanquished by adversaries in fight.

Hastening on then he beheld a surpassingly fascinating maiden alone in the forest, adorned with every kind of ornament, seized by Danu's son Dr̥dha-keśa who bore a staff, and screaming out pitifully “Save me! save me!” again and again. “Fear not!” said he to her, and exclaiming “You are slain!” to him, he said—“What wicked man exercise rule over this earth while Karandhama is king here,² before whose majesty all kings bow down to the earth?”

Seeing him at hand then, grasping his choice bow, the slender-limbed maiden exclaimed more than once—“Save me!” and—“Here I am carried off! I am king Karandhama's daughter-in-law and Avikṣit's wife. I am carried off by this wicked demon in the forest, – I who belong to a master—as if I belong to no master.”

Then the angry hero addressed that most evil-minded Dānava,—“Release her and depart while alive; otherwise you shall not live!” Quitting her then the Dānava raised his staff aloft and rushed at him; and he also, the prince, poured a shower of arrows on him. The Dānava, filled with exceeding frenzy, warded them off with a multitude of arrows, and hurled his staff that was studded with a hundred spikes at the prince. The prince split it then, as it was rushing onwards, with arrows. And he, the Dānava, grasping aloft a tree that was near, stood firmly in the battle and then hurled that tree at the prince who was discharging clouds of arrows. And he shattered it into small fragments.

The boy grew thenceforward, as the moon waxes in its bright fortnight. He was the source of pleasure to his parents, and the desire of the people. He was one of the sixteen greatest and most famous kings of antiquity (Dronā-p iv 2170-83, Śānti-p xxix 910-17) he is said to have offered a sacrifice to the brāhmana ṛṣi Uśiravija at the Jāmbu-nada lake in the Northern region (Udyoga-p cx 3842-3), and was praised for his liberality in that he gave his daughter to Angirasa (Śānti-p ccxxxiv 8602, Anuśās-p cxxxvii

He gained riches thereby, being duly intent on his own rites, O brāhmaṇa, and sacrificed with great sacrifices to Indra and the other gods;² just as these other castes also, unwearied each in its own business and possessing riches amassed thereby, performed pious obligations and other rites. The earth while under high-souled Marutta's protection entered into rivalry with the dwellers in the dwellings of the thirty gods,³ O best of twice-born men. Not only were all kings of the earth surpassed by him, but even the king of the gods was surpassed by him as a sacrificer with declarations⁴ of a hundred sacrifices.⁵

The whole of that king's⁹ territory, allotment¹⁰ and other property and palaces were made brilliant, all golden, by that priest at a sacrifice by means of austerities, O brāhmaṇa.

It seems to have been also called Muñjāvaṭa, and the summit Muñja-prṣṭha. It was visited by Vasuhoma, king of Aṅga, and Rāma and Māndhātṛ (Śānti-p. cxxii. 4469-75). It was a sacred place of pilgrimage (Kūrma Pur. II xxxvii. 38). This may be meant by Mujavant in Atharva-Veda I. xxv. 2, 8. There was another place of pilgrimage called Muñja-vaṭa which was apparently in or near Kuru-ṣṣetra (Mahā-Bh., Vana-p. lxxxiii. 5092, and lxxxv. 8210).

6. The Mahā-Bh., says Aṅgiras was Avikṣit's priest (Aśvam.-p. iv. 80-85). Aṅgiras had two sons, Bṛhaspati and Samvarta, and there was rivalry between them, but Bṛhaspati the elder got the pre-eminence and became Indra's purohita. Marutta in rivalry overcame Indra, and Bṛhaspati who desired Indra's good repulsed Marutta, and declined to be his family priest. Marutta then by Narada's advice went to Vārāṇasī (Benares) and secured Samvarta as his priest (Droṇa-p. lv. 2170-71; Śānti-p. xxix. 910-15; and Aśvam.-p. iv. 86 to ix. 274). There was a great quarrel between Bṛhaspati and Samvarta in consequence (ibid., and Vāyu Pur.). The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa says Samvarta inaugurated Marutta with the Mahābhisheka

At what king's sacrifice was everything of gold abandoned, as at Marutta's sacrifice, by the twice-born brāhmanas, whose houses were stocked with gems?¹ And at his sacrifice what gold in the shape of palaces and other things was cast as largesse, that indeed the three other castes received; therefrom some of them gave similar gifts."²

Marutta's exploits

Marutta visited his grandmother's hermitage and set the Nāgas' world on fire— They implored his mother Bhāvinī's protection according to her old promise—She and Avikṣit accepted their entreaties and went to Marutta.

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

On hearing this speech from the ascetic, the king became covered with shame. Exclaiming, "Fie on me, who am blind because I have no spies," he sighed and took his bow. He went hastily then towards Āurva's hermitage and made obeisance to his father's mother Vīrā with his head, and to the ascetics as was proper; and they landed him with blessings. And seeing the seven sons,² the ascetics, bitten by the Nāgas on the ground, the king reproached himself repeatedly in front of them, and said thus,— "What I do now to the wicked Nāgas, who despise my valour and who hate the brāhmaṇas, let all the world with the gods, demons and mankind see that!"

So saying the king took his weapon Samvartaka³ in anger, in order to destroy all the Nāgas that roamed in Pātāla and on the earth. The Nāgas' world burst into flame then suddenly all around; while it was being burnt by the glowing power of the great weapons,⁴ he hemmed it in. 'Ah! Ah! dear father' — 'Ah! mother!' — 'Ah! Ah! dear child'— such cries arose then among the Nāgas in that confusion caused by the weapon. Some with the ends of their tails burning, other Nāgas with their hoods burning, both seized their children and wives and abandoned their ornaments and clothing.

Avikṣit called on Marutta to spare the Nāgas, but Marutta insisting on his duty refused—Avikṣit proposed to fight with him, and Marutta, though deprecating such combat, agreed—The ṛṣi intervened, the Nāgas restored the dead ṛṣis to life, and all parted affectionately—Marutta's wives and successor are named.

dreadful and terrifying, and actually ready for use—he, seeing the king whose countenance was wrinkled with frowns, said,—“Be not you wrathful, O Marutta; let your weapon be drawn back.” More than once so said he, lofty-minded Avikṣit, to him, the varying course of whose colour speedily vanished in pallor. Listening to his father's speech and looking at him again and again, he, still grasping his bow, prostrated himself before his parents with veneration and replied:—“Most grievously have the Nāgas offended me, O father.

Nariṣyanta's exploits.

Marutta gave the kingdom to his son Nariṣyanta -Nariṣyanta resolved to do some great deed and performed a great sacrifice at which he enriched the brāhmaṇas for life—Consequently he could not induce any brāhmaṇas to attend a second sacrifice except after great difficulty—All brāhmaṇas then were themselves offering sacrifices.

Marutta's son was famed as Nariṣyanta;² he was the eldest and indeed the best of the eighteen sons. And for eighty-five thousands of years the lordly kṣatriya Marutta enjoyed the entire earth. After ruling the kingdom according to his own righteousness, after offering peerless sacrifices, he anointed his eldest son Nariṣyanta as king and departed to the forest.

With his mind concentrated on one idea the king practised great austerities there. He ascended to the sky, covering the heaven and earth with his glory, O brāhmaṇa.

His son Nariṣyanta, being wise, pondered thus, considering how his father had acted and other kings also,—

"In my family my ancestors have been high-souled kings. Offerers of sacrifices, they protected the earth righteously, being powerful and they were givers of riches; they turned not back in battle. But who is able to imitate the exploits of those high-souled kings? Yet the righteous deed which they¹ did with sacrifices and other offerings, that I wish to do; and that is not feasible; what can I do? The earth is protected according to righteousness; what virtue has the king in this? If he does not duly protect, a king is sinful and goes to hell.

If he has riches, a king must certainly offer great sacrifices, and must bestow gifts; what is there wonderful herein? A king is the refuge of those who are perishing. High birth and shame and anger, dependence on hostile folk and one's own rules of righteousness ensure that there is no fleeing from battle.

As all this has been well achieved by my ancestors and by my father Marutta, who now can do it so well? What then shall I do, that has not been done by those ancestors, who were sacrificers, choice men, gentle, and who turned not back from battle, whose manliness did not fail in great battles and conflicts?² With whose deed shall I coming strive unappalledly?

After deliberating thus the king performed a single sacrifice, the like of which, made splendid by the lavishing of riches, no one else had performed. Now after giving very great wealth to the twice-born brāhmaṇas, enough for life, the king further gave them a hundred times as much food at the sacrifice, and cattle, clothing, ornaments and granaries and other gifts. Thus he intoxicated each one of them who dwell in the earth.

And the lord of the whole earth obtained no brāhmaṇas then as sacrificial priests. He began then to give a gift on the space outside the sacrificial altar. Nevertheless they did not accept it at all, having their houses full of wealth. In order to give again to a twice-born brāhmaṇas he spoke thus, being dejected,—“Alas! it is very splendid that there is no poor brāhmaṇa anywhere in the earth; and it is not splendid that this treasury is useless to one who does not sacrifice. No one undertakes sacrificial priesthood;¹ all folk among the twice-born are sacrificing, and do not assent when we are giving, a gift.”

Dama's exploits

Nariṣyanta was succeeded by his son Dama, an accomplished king—Sumanā daughter of the king of Daśārṇa chose him as her husband at her svayam-vara—Three other princes tried to take her by force, and Dama, after appealing to the assembled kings against their conduct, was left in accordance with marriage rules to assert his right by arms— He defeated those kings and married Sumanā.

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

Narisyanta's son was Dama,¹ the tamer of the wicked and of enemies; like Indra's was his strength; compassion such as a muni's was his disposition. That very famous son was born to that king of Indra-senā, a princess descended from Babhru,² after abiding nine years in his mother's womb.

Because while abiding in her womb he caused his mother to acquire self-restraint, and because it was supposed, 'this prince also will be self-restrained in disposition,' therefore indeed his family priest, who knew the three times,³ gave Narisyanta's son the name 'Dama'.⁴

Now prince Dama learnt the knowledge of the bow entirely from Vṛṣa-parvan, king of men;⁵ and

- 1 He and his descendants are given in Viṣṇu Pur. IV 1
- 2 This may be Babhru or Vabhru, son of Druhyu, son of Yayāti (Hari-V, xxxii 1837) There were other kings of the same name later, as Vabhru son of Devāvṛdha (Hari-V, xxxviii 2010-13, and Matsya Pur xlv 56), Babhru son of Viśva-garbha (Hari-V, xc 5252), etc
- 3 The past, the present and the future.
- 4 "Self-control"
- 5 This would appear to be Vṛṣa-parvan, a famous king of the Dānavas (Mahā-Bh, Adī-p lxxi. 3367-8, Sabhā-p. iii 58-60), whose daughter Sarmisthā married Yayāti (ibid, and Adī-p IV x) There was a famous hermitage

he learnt the use of all kinds of weapons thoroughly from the noble Daitya Dundubhi⁶ who dwelt in Tapo-vana,⁷ and he learnt the Vedas and all the Vedāṅgas from Śakti,⁸ and controlling himself he learnt the practice of religious devotion from the royal ṛṣi Arṣi-ṣena.⁹

Him, who was naturally high-souled, who was accomplished in arms and was great in strength, did Sumanā, when placed¹⁰ at the svayam-vara by her father, choose as her husband, she, daughter of mighty Cāru-karman¹¹ king of Daśārṇa,¹² while all the kings looked on, who had assembled there for her sake.

Now the Madra¹³ king's son Mahā-nanda, who was great in strength and prowess, was also deeply called Vṛṣa-parvan's hermitage near Mount Kailāsa in the Himālayas (Mahā-Bh, Vana-p clviii 11541-3m clxxxvii 12340-44), but that Vṛṣa-parvan appears to have been contemporary with the Pāṇḍavas, according to the first of these last two passages

- 6 I have not found a Daitya of this name elsewhere
- 7 This means a "grove where austerities are practised" but there appears to have been a place of this name, for Yayāti retired there (Viṣṇu Pur IV x)
- 8 This appears to be Vasistha's son who was called Śakti (Wilson's Viṣṇu Pur—edit F Hall-I p 8, III, iii, pp 35 and 36) and, better, Śakti (Mahā-Bh., Adī-p clxxxvii 6757, clxxxviii 6792-4, Śānti-p ccclii) He was Parāśara's father (loc cit.), see chap 131 verse 32
- 9 For Arṣi-ṣena read Arṣi-sena, as in the Poona edition He is mentioned in the Mahā-Bh, as having a famous hermitage near Mount Gandha-mādana in the Himālayas (Vana-p clviii 11626-7, Śalya-p xli, AnuŚān-p xxv 1741), and he is there made a contemporary of the Pāṇḍavas. That Arṣi-ṣena or another of the same name was son of Śala (or Laśa), who was son of Su-hotra (hari-V, xxix 1518-20, see also the Vāyu, Brahma and Bhāḡ Purānas).
- 10 Kṛtā, svayam-vara kṛte pitrā, "at the svayam-vara arranged by her father," would seem better
- 11 I have not found this name elsewhere

enamoured of her, and so also were the son of Saṅkrandana king of Vidarbha,¹ and prince Vapuṣmat, who bore a great bow and was of lofty intellect.

Now seeing that Dama, tamer of the wicked and of enemies, was chosen by her,² they took counsel thus with one another there, being infatuated by love,—“We will seize this beautifully-formed maiden from him by force and go home. She shall be his among us, whom she, the maiden of beautiful hips, shall take with the intention that he shall be her husband according to the ordinance of the svayam-vara—his wife she shall be, delivered over according to righteousness by our wish. But this is certainly not approved. There is another² form also, the Rākṣasa,³ for those who live by bearing arms. Now whoever carries off this maiden by force after slaying those who beset his path, his in truth she is by the Rākṣasa marriage, O kings. Having challenged them thus, he then discharged a shower of arrows there, covering the kings therewith as a storm of rain covers trees with darkness. Those heroic kings also discharged arrows, pikes, spears and maces, and Dama playfully clove the missiles used by them. They also clove the arrows shot by him, and Narisya-nta's son clove the multitudes of arrows discharged by those kings, O muni. As the fight went on then between Dama and the princes, Mahānanda penetrated with sword in hand where Dama was. Dama, seeing him advancing with sword in hand in the great fight, discharged showers of arrows as Indra pours out the rains. Mahānanda immediately then clove those his missiles, which composed meshes of arrows, with his sword and avoided others. Mahānanda, great in valour, next mounted on Dama's chariot in fury then and fought with Dama.

When Mahānanda was killed, the kings in a mass turned backwards, but Vapuṣmat, king of Kuṇḍina,¹ stood his ground; and full of strength, pride, and frenzy he fought with Dama. He was son of a king of the Southern country and was a habitual fighter.² As that prince was fighting fiercely, he, Dama, with a scimitar³ lightly clove both his charioteer's head and his banner in the battle. His sword being broken, that prince then seized his mace studded with many spikes, and he, Dama, hastily split that also while it was in his very hand. Whilst Vapuṣmat is taking up another choice weapon, during that interval Dama pierced him with an arrow and laid him low on the ground. That prince was laid low on the ground then, powerless in his limbs and quivering, and ceased in his mind from fighting. After gazing on him as he lay so with no more thought of fighting, Dama restraining himself⁴ abandoned him, and taking Sumanā went forth with happy mind.

Dama returned home triumphant—Nariṣyanta transferred the kingdom to him and retired with his queen Indra-senā to the forest—The defeated prince Vapuṣmat met him there, and in revenge killed him—Indra-senā sent tidings to Dama that he should punish the murderer.

Thus the prince gained her, Sumanā, as his wife, O most great muni, and prostrated himself¹ at his father's and mother's feet; and she, beautiful-browed Sumanā, bowed then before her parents-in-law. And they were both welcomed then with blessings by them both. And a great festival was held in Nariṣyanta's city itself, since Dama had both married a wife and arrived from the city of the king of Daśārṇa. On hearing that he was thus connected by marriage with the lord of Daśārṇa and that the kings were defeated, king Nariṣyanta rejoiced with his son. And Dama, son of the great king, sported with Sumanā amidst choice gardens and woodland spots, in palaces and on the summits of hills.

Now after a long time Sumanā, daughter of the king of Daśārṇa, while sporting with Dama conceived a child. And king Nariṣyanta, who had enjoyed enjoyments as lord of the earth, reached his declining years, and anointing Dama to the kingdom departed to the forest; and his wife Indra-senā also went as a female ascetic. He dwelt there according to the ordinance of vāna-prasthas.²

Sankrandana's son Vapuṣmat, king of the Southern region, most evil in conduct, went to the forest to kill deer, with a small body of followers. He saw Nariṣyanta as an ascetic dirty and mud-covered, and his wife Indra-senā most extremely weakened by austerities, and asked,—“Who are you, a brāhmaṇa, or a forest-wandering kṣatriya, or a vaiśya who has reached the vāna-prastha stage?³ Tell me!” The king, being under a rule of silence, gave him no answer at all then, and Indra-senā told him all that truly.

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

When Nariṣyanta's son Dama uttered this vow, his eyes rolled with anger and passion, while he covered his beard with his hand. Exclaiming "Alas! I am stricken!" he kept his father in mind and reproached Fate; and he addressed all those ministers; he brought the family priest there.

Dama spoke

Tell me what should be done in this matter, now that my dear father has reached the gods' abode. Ye, sirs, have heard what that śūdra ascetic has said. That king was aged, an ascetic, engaged in the vāna-prastha's vow, observing the rule of silence, unarmed and dwelling with my mother Indra-senā, She who was associated with him told the exact account to Vapuṣmat. Thereupon the evil-souled foe, drawing his scimitar and seizing my father's matted locks with his left hand, killed the world's master as if he were a masterless churl. And my mother, having actually commissioned me, was uttering the word "Shame!" and, calling me feeble in lot and void of good fortune, has entered the fire. Embracing him, Nariṣyanta, she has departed to the abode of the thirty gods. I being such will now do what my mother has said. And let my army composed of elephants, horses, chariots, and infantry be arranged.

Mārkaṇḍeya spoke

The ministers hearing his speech exclaimed "Alas! Alas!" and did accordingly therefore, while distraught in mind.

Accompanied by his dependants, army, and chariots, and by his retinue, they, placing king

Dama at their head and taking the blessings of the brāhmaṇa family priest who knew the three divisions of time, went forth. Breathing hard like the Serpent king, Dama advanced against Vapuṣmat, while slaying the wardens on his boundaries and other neighbouring princes, and hastening¹ towards the southern region.

Seeing him approaching, Vapuṣmat filled with patience;² and Sankrandana's son Vapuṣmat recognized Dama, who had arrived attended by his retinue, by his ministers, and by his dependants. With unwavering mind he directed his armies; and issuing from his city he despatched a messenger to announce,—“Come you on more quickly! Nariṣyanta with his wife awaits you! O you of kṣatriya caste, approach near me!

But Dama, on hearing all that speech from the messenger, went on hastily, remembering his previously uttered vow, breathing hard like a serpent. And the man who boasted of his army³ was summoned to battle. And then there was an

And the armies fought, both chariot-rider against chariot-rider, elephant-rider against elephant-rider,¹ horseman against horseman, O brāhmaṇa ṛṣi. That battle was tumultuous, while all the gods, Siddhas, Gandharvas, and Rākṣasas looked on. The earth quaked, O brāhmaṇa, as Dama fought in that battle.

There was no elephant, no chariot-rider, no horse which could endure his arrows. Next Vapuṣmat's general fought with Dama, and Dama pierced him deeply in the heart with an arrow at close-quarters. When he fell, his army verily was seized with a panic to flee.

Then spoke Dama, tamer of his foes, to their master thus,—“Where go you, wicked one, after having slaughtered my father, who was an ascetic and weapon-less and practising austerities? You are a kṣatriya; stay you!” Then staying back he, Vapuṣmat, attended by his younger brother fought with Dama. Mounted in his chariot he fought in company with his sons, relations, and kinsmen. With the arrows discharged from his bow the regions of the sky were then pervaded,² and he filled Dama and his chariot with multitudes of arrows quickly. And thereupon Dama in wrath excited by his father's murder split the arrows discharged by them³ and pierced them also with other arrows. In that way he brought down to Yama's abode the seven sons, the relations and kinsmen and friends,⁴ each with a single arrow, O dvija.

The Birds spoke

Having spoken thus, O Jaimineya,⁶ the great muni Mārkaṇḍeya let the muni Krauṣṭuki depart, and performed the mid-day ceremony. From him we also have heard what we have declared to you, O great muni. For this was perfected by Him who is without beginning.⁷ Spoken formerly by the self-existent One to the muni Mārkaṇḍeya was this which we have uttered to you. It is sacred, pure, and grants length of life; it bestows righteousness, love, wealth and final emancipation from existence; it delivers immediately from all sin those who read it, those who hear it.

The text is Jaimineyam, “Having spoken thus to Jaimineya:” but the Birds have been relating to Jaimini what Mārkaṇḍeya had before told to Krauṣṭuki, and this reading is insuitable unless Jaimineya be taken as Krauṣṭuki's patronymic; and that it cannot be, for Krauṣṭuki's patronymic is said to have been Bhāguri, see pp. 436 and 445. I have ventured therefore to read Jaimineya instead.

अष्टादशपुराणानि यानि प्राह पितामहः॥७॥

And the very four questions indeed, which you did put to us at the very first— the conversation between the father and son, and the creation by the Self-existent One, and the administrations¹ of the Manus, and the exploits of the kings, O muni, this we have declared to you. What not do you wish to hear? After hearing or reading² all these matters in assemblies, a man discarding all sins may reach absorption into Brahman at the end.³ There⁴ are eighteen Purāṇas which the Forefather spoke

तेषां तु सप्तमं ज्ञेयं मार्कण्डेयं सुविश्रुतम्।

ब्राह्मं पादं वैष्णवं च शैवं भागवतं तथा॥८॥

तथान्यन्नारदीयं च कर्मण्डेयं च सप्तमम्।

चतुर्दशं वामनं च कौर्मं पञ्चदशं तथा।

मात्स्यं च गारुडं चैव ब्रह्माण्डं च ततः परम्॥११॥

Now the seventh of them is to be known as the very famous Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa.⁵ They are the Brāhma, the Pādma, and the Vaiṣṇava, the Śaiva and the Bhāgavata, and also the Nāradya besides, and the Mārkaṇḍeya as seventh, the Āgneya which was declared the eighth, and the Bhaviṣya ninth, the Brahma-vaivarta tenth, the Liṅga known as the eleventh, Vārāha declared the twelfth, the Skanda next as thirteenth, and the Vāmana fourteenth, and the Kaurma fifteenth, and the Mātsya, and the Gāruḍa and next the Brahmāṇḍa.

अष्टादशपुराणानां नामधेयानि यः पठेत्।

त्रिसस्यं जपते नित्यं सोऽश्रमेधफलं लभेत्॥१२॥

He who may read the titles of the eighteen Purāṇas, who repeats⁶ them at the three periods of the day continually, may obtain the result of a horse-sacrifice.

सर्गश्च प्रतिर्सर्गश्च वंशो मन्वन्तराणि च।

वंशानुचरितं चैव पुराणं पञ्चलक्षणम्॥१३॥

Both creation and secondary creation, genealogy and the manvantaras and the exploits in the genealogies constitute a Purāṇa with the five characteristics.⁷

चतुःप्रश्नसमोपेतं पुराणं ह्येतदुत्तमम्।

श्रुत्वा पुनश्च ते पापं कल्पकोटिशतैः कृतम्॥१४॥

This Purāṇa which contains the four questions is indeed of the highest quality. Now when it is heard, sin committed in hundreds of ten millions of ages perishes. Brahmanicide and other sins, and other deeds that are vile, all those perish thereby, like grass smitten by the blast. The merit that is gained by making gifts at Puṣkara⁸ accrues from hearing this Purāṇa; and a man attains to a benefit superior to all the Vedas by completely acquiring this.

A man should worship him who may cause it to be heard, as he worships the divine Forefather, ⁹with perfumes and flowers and with gifts of clothing and with gratifications to brāhmaṇas. And kings should give according to their ability villages and other lands and carriages.¹⁰

After hearing all this Purāna, which is augmented with the objects of the Veda and which is the sole abode of the Dharma-sāstras, a man may obtain every object ¹ After hearing the entire Purāna, let a wise man do full reverence to Vyāsa for the sake of the benefits of righteousness, wealth, love and final emancipation from existence as therein declared Let him give his spiritual preceptor a cow, accompanied with gold, clothing and ornaments In order to gain the benefits that come from hearing it let him gratify his spiritual preceptor with gifts

He who, without paying reverence to the man who reads the Purāna out, hears a single verse, acquires no merit, verily he is known as a Scripture-thief ² Not him do the gods gladden, nor the Pitris, with sons, and they desire not ³ the sraddha given by him nor the benefit gained by bathing at sacred places of pilgrimage He incurs the censure of a Scripture-thief in an assembly of good men Wise men must not listen to this scripture with contempt, but when this noble scripture is contemned as it is being read by sages, ⁴ the offender becomes dumb, he is born as a fool in seven births

The man who hears the whole of this Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa is not to be lamented; nor is he indeed to be lamented who recites this poetical work properly, O dvija. चितयन्तपरमोदारं पक्षिणां वाक्यमीरितम्॥ ४२॥

Jaimini spoke

In India there was not that which burst asunder my doubts, O you twice-born;⁴ you, sirs, have accomplished that which no one else now will do. You have attained long life, are good,⁵ and are clever in knowledge and intelligence. And thus let there be unerring intelligence in the application of the Sāṅkhya doctrine to the knowledge of spirit! Let evil-mindedness that springs from pain wrought by a father's curse depart from you!⁶ After speaking this much the muni went to his own hermitage, pondering over the speech uttered by the Birds, which was sublimely noble.

End of the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa.

1. Su-jana of the Calcutta Appendix is better than sva-jana.
2. Sad-artho; or perhaps "being in good circumstances"
3. Or "possessing pure success in the knowledge of religious devotion."

4. The Calcutta Appendix reads more bluntly, "In India twice-born brāhmaṇas have lost the power of bursting asunder perplexities and doubts."
5. For santu of the Bombay and Poona editions read santah with the Calcutta Appendix.
6. Vyapaitu vah. See pages 13-16.
